24 Ships Come, Flying Upset in Wall Street Repeal Seems Certain No Russian Anti-Semitism

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

AT EIGHTEEN MINUTES to four, as this is written, General Balbo with his 24 seaplanes comes roaring down the Hudson river, past the giant sky-scrapers of Manhattan, to his landing place near the ocean's edge.

High among the clouds, stretching far up the river, you see the great airships in groups of three, flying in perfect formation. You know that those ships have flown from Italy to Chicago by a route longer than 6000 miles, have flown in a few hours from Chicago to New York, and will soon fly back to Italy.

What a glory for Italy, what a tribute to the skill and discipline of her fliers. There is no other flying fleet to compare with it. Congratulations to Mussolini, Balbo and the great Italian nation.

If General Balbo would take his 24 seaplanes on to Washington, fly around the War and Navy buildings, and let as many as can realize that it IS possible to send a fleet of ships on a peaceful or hostile errand across the Atlantic to the United States NOW, he would do this country a favor.

We are still treating airships as an "an auxiliary" of floating ships and marching soldiers, which is purest idiocy.

When it is possible to send 24 ships, each of which could carry explosive bombs and poisonous gas, in military formation, 6000 miles, with power to destroy inland cities at the end of the trip, what is the use of talking about any kind of war except war from the air?

Geese will remark that General Balbo had to proceed cautiously. Of course he did, in PEACE TIME.

But in war, instead of sending 24 planes, ONE THOUSAND would be sent, and if half or three-quarters were wrecked on the way, that would make no difference. There would be enough left. And no one counts the cost in money or life in war.

And no one could count the cost in life or indemnity to this country if a hostile air fleet should reach our shores and, dividing, bombing our principal cities.

They could do that today.

Something happened to the alcohol stocks in Wall Street yesterday, and that frightened the whole speculative list. Perhaps "Distillers" dropped because somebody decided that the people would be intelligent enough to drink beer instead of whiskey. Anyhow, there was a scare all along the line, wheat dropping off ten cents, cotton two dollars, other stocks weak.

The increasing wet vote, with so many states in line and others, wet, soon to be heard from, will evidently end prohibition as the law of the land.

The country will then return to the old problem of regulating the dispensing of whiskey and other alcoholic poisons, which, as Thomas Jefferson said, could best be done by encouraging temperate use of beer and light wine.

The Zionist Organization in America says 4000 German Jews have migrated to Palestine within the last three months, one-half self-supporting, the other half depending on the Jewish agency.

The plan is to have 250,000 Jews, mostly from Germany, settle in Palestine within a four-year period.

To carry out the project calls for a fund of $25,000,000. It appears, however, that even in Palestine the number of emigrants is restricted, and Palestine, unfortunately, is a country limited in its agricultural and commercial possibilities and opportunities.

The British, reaching out for business, are perfecting an agreement with Russia under which Russian purchases will be increased in England, especially purchases of heavy machinery. Russia is cancelling her business with Germany. Stalin does not like Mr. Hitler's denunciation of Communism.

Spain, it is said, will recognize Russia and endeavor to do business with that country.

Uncle Sam feels unable to make up his mind, although it is reported that Russian agents have been clearing up their embassy and preparing to send representatives to Washington.

Trotzky, formerly head of the Russian army, exiled from Russia, has received permission to reside in France.

Trotzky's exile from Russia, however, had nothing to do with his being a Jew, for in Russia there is no official anti-Semitic discrimination.

This is well set forth admirably by a young American student, Herbert L. Abrons, son of Louis W. Abrons, of New York, who has traveled extensively in Russia. He writes:

"Under Communism the Jews have their own Yiddish courts, schools and Jewish 'houses of culture.' Full protection is

POST FLYING PACIFIC TO ALASKA

BULLETIN

Washington, July 20 (AP)—Officers of the United States coast guard cutter Northland advised headquarters today they believed Jimmy Mattern, round-the-world aviator, had departed from Anadyr, Siberia, for Nome, Alaska, in a Russian seaplane.

The Northland said it had picked up a radio message from Anadyr saying a seaplane flown by Aviator Lee Crosby, with Mattern as a passenger, was "flying today five hours, 32 minutes in Nome."

Moscow, July 20 (AP)—Wiley Post, American globe-girdling aviator, took off from Khabarovsk, Siberia, for the North American continent today with a lead of 30 hours and 16 minutes over the record he and Harold Gatty set in 1931.

He refueled his plane at Khabarovsk, enjoyed a meal at which he refused to take any wine, and sped toward Alaska despite weather reports of thunderstorms ahead.

Post arrived at Khabarovsk at 3:45 a. m. today, Moscow time (7:45 p. m. Wednesday, E.S.T.); from Rukhlovo, 700 miles away, and was off again at 5:58 a. m. (9:58 p. m. E. S. T.).

RELENTLESS PACE

His relentless pace in the face of almost complete exhaustion was due to his desire to better the mark he made in 1931 with Gatty over much the same route.

He and Gatty were 144 hours, four minutes out of New York when they hopped from Khabarovsk; Post alone had an elapsed time there of only 113 hours, 8 minutes.

His lead had been reduced to only 42 minutes by rain and fog he encountered on the trip from Moscow to Novosibirsk, Siberia, and later from Irkutsk to Rukhlovo, but he increased it by a fast flight to Khabarovsk and the early hop from there. He and Gatty were grounded at Khabarovsk almost a full day.

Post left Irkutsk, 1400 miles west of Khabarovsk, at 7 a. m. and arrived at Rukhlovo at 2:32 p. m. Wednesday, Moscow time (6:32 a. m., E. D. H.). Bad weather forced them down there. He had planned to land 300 miles farther east at Blagoveshchensk.

PLANE BRUSHES TREES

Shortly before reaching Rukhlovo his plane brushed some tree tops in a fog but he made a perfect landing. Though very tired he decided to forego much needed rest to gain time.

Post told a newspaper correspondent at Khabarovsk he expected to cut more than a full day from the 1931 record of eight days, 15 hours and 51 minutes.

DEATH IN EITHER ONE

Thomas W. J. McGarrell, police headquarters fingerprint expert, examines boy's baseball bat and iron pinch bar with which Stephen Timino was beaten to death and Thomas Santaro probably fatally injured battling would-be hi-jackers of slot machines in alleged speakeasy at Fellows ct., Roxbury. Roxbury Man Killed in Slot Machine War

A night of carousing in a notorious but tawdry speakeasy on Fellows ct., Roxbury, which had defied police for months, ended early today in the robbery of slot-machines, murder of the proprietor, probable fatal wounding of another man and by injury to a woman.

It was a sequel to a long series of killings attributed to the slot-machine racket and police powerlessness to close "dives" running wide-open.

The injured woman and six men were taken into custody for questioning and search launched for three other men and three women who took part in the carousing, according to the police.

SLAIN WITH BALL BAT

The slain man was Stephen Timino, 34, reputed operator of the place against which five liquor convictions had been obtained. A nearby house was raided last week by federal agents as a "cutting plant" supplying 40 Roxbury and South End speakeasies.

Dying in City Hospital is Thomas Santoro, 32, of Regen. st., Roxbury. The injured woman is Mrs. Anna Murphy, 32, of Massachusetts ave., South End.

All three were clubbed with a small boy's baseball bat, which was found, bloodstained, in a field across the court. A smashed and bloodstained slot-machine was also found there.

Police said Mrs. Murphy told the most consistent story of what happened. She said three colored men and three girls entered the place after midnight and played the slot-machines.

BATTLE OVER TOKEN

One of the men received a token entitling him to the contents of the machine, but Timino refused to pay. The player seized the bat, killed Timino and swung at Santoro. The back-swing of the bat split Mrs. Murphy's scalp.

The body of Timino and the wounded pair were carried to a second-floor room, frim which the woman was later removed by some friend.

The crime was reported to police by John di Salvatore of Fellows st., who said he went to the house this forenoon, found nobody on the first floor and was led to the second floor by groans of the dying man.

Those taken to Station 4, Warren ave., for questioning by Lieut. James Hinchey are John O'Brien, 73, single, of Washington st.; John J. McDonnell, 21, single, of Tileston st.; Joseph Forti, 43, married, of Tileston st.; Stanley Churchill, 43, married, of Columbus ave.; Roy Edwards, 28, married, colored, of East Lenox st.; Mrs. Murphy and Di Salvatore.

WIDOW, SMILING, HEARS OF M'MAHON'S HUGS; FRIEND STRICKEN

By WIN BROOKS

Boston American Staff Correspondent

Salem Courthouse, July 20—The state, which seeks her life, and the defense, which seeks her acquittal, both scored smashing points today at the trial of Jessie Costello, alleged poisoner of her husband.

With the same amazing nonchalance and the same steady smile that has played about her, lips from the beginning, Jessie heard them both.

In her behalf, in its support of its now apparent claim that Fire Capt. William J. Costello of Peabody killed himself, the defense brought out that after his death from potassium cyanide poisoning in his home, a revolver and five cartridges for it were found secreted in his desk at the fire house.

Defense counsel fought bitterly but without success to get into the evidence that Costello, —a melancholy and ailing man, given much to secret prayer following the death of a baby son —had come into possession of the gun only a short time before his death.

State Scores on Denial of Use of Cyanide

And the defense claim of suicide was circumstantially bolstered again when it was disclosed that one week before his death from cyanide, Capt. Costello was assigned to give first aid instructions which might require a study of poison and poison antidotes.

But the state, seeking to send Jessie to the chair, scored just as heavily when it was testified that commercial cleaning fluids solely were in use at his firehouse for the purpose of polishing metals.

For it was read into evidence yesterday that Jessie Costello had said her husband mixed, for the purpose of cleaning a boiler in their home, the potassium cyanide and oxalic acid she had bought a few hours before he died.

And while one woman friend of the widow fainted as she told of McMahon's death visit, this was generally a quiet courtroom today. The testimony that fell from the lips of the new state witnesses, friends of the dead man and his companions in the fire department —and friends, some of them still, of the woman on trial—conjured up a sequence of sharply outlined and dramatic scenes from the life of the Costellos

'Bill,' the Melancholy Father of Prayful Grief

One saw "Bill" Costello playing with his children at the firehouse, fitting firemen's hats on the head of his little boy seated at the wheel of the hook-and-ladder.

One saw "Bill" Costello going upstairs alone in the firehouse to pray—spells of fervid religious devotion which became more frequent after he lost a son, even as he changed from a quiet, solemn man to a melancholy one.

And there was drawn a lighter picture of the absent central figure of this trial, for one witness testified to Costello's desire not to be among the watchtowers at the fireman's ball and told of his prac-

'WET' STOCKS IN NEW DROP

New York, July 20 (AP)—Financial markets tried to steady today, after the sharp relapse of yesterday, but nervous twinges added considerable uncertainty to the attempted convalescence.

The principal grains sagged, rallied, and then dropped sharply, wheat getting belo w$1 a bushel. Cotton was easier as were silver futures. The dollar turned upward in foreign exchange markets, gaining nearly 10 cents against the pound sterling at one time. Bods were irregular.

The so-called "wet" shares that dropped some 4 to 14 points to their previous stump included American Commercial Alcohol, National Distillers, Commercial Solvents, U. S. Industrial Alcohol and Crown Cork.

Two Americans Free From Spanish Jail

Palma, Mallorca Island, July 20 (INS)—Mrs. Clinton Lockwood, of Springfield, Mass. and Rutherford Fullerton, two of the five Americans imprisoned here for six weeks for allegedly participating in an attack upon a civil guard, were released on bail today on instructions from Madrid.

The three others, Mrs. Lockwood's husband, Edmund W. Blodgett of Stamford, Conn., and Roderick Mead of New York, were unable to raise bail. Efforts are being made by friends to raise the sum required for their release.

CAPITAL PAYS HONOR TO GEN. BALBO, ARMADA OFFICERS

19-GUN MILITARY SALUTE GREETS ITALIAN FLIERS

Washington, July 20 (AP)—General Italo Balbo, leader of the Italian air armada that flew across the Atlantic to visit the Century of Progress Exposition in Chicago, arrived in Washington at 10:28 a. m., E.S.T., today for a visit to President Roosevelt.

Smiling broadly as he stepped from the navy plane that brought him to Washington from New York, Gen. Balbo was greeted by Lieut. Col. B. K. Yount, commander of Bolling Field, where the Italian airmen landed.

Far up the field artillery boomed forth with a 19-gun salute. The United States Navy Band played the Italian National anthem as Balbo walked with Yount to the reviewing stand.

There he was greeted by high governmental dignitaries, including Secretaries Swanson and Roper.

Italian Ambassador Rosso and a large group from the diplomatic corps gathered to do him honor.

After a brief exchange of greetings Balbo and his party reviewed a guard of honor presented by the army and departed for a downtown hotel to rest momentarily before meeting President Roosevelt and plunging into a round of functions.

Gen. Balbo Flies in Roosevelt's Plane

Floyd Bennett Field, New York, July 20 (AP)—Breaking their return flight to Italy to pay a call upon President Roosevelt, Gen. Italo Balbo and 23 of his officers took off in United States army and navy planes for Washington at 6:15 a. m. (E. S. T.).

The black-bearded leader of the Italian air force was in the first plane to leave the ground, the Navy cabin amphibian, which is assigned to the personal use of President Roosevelt and such of his distinguished guests as he may designate.

Gen. Balbo was accompanied by E. W. Spencer, his naval aide. The plane was piloted by Lieut. F. D. Owens of the Anacostia naval station.

The Italian general seemed in happy mood as he boarded the plane. He even halted a moment to pose, smiling for several amateur photographers who had slipped by the police lines.

Gen. Pellegrini, second in command to Gen. Balbo, was in the second plane. He was in a low wing plane with a bullet-shaped body.

In all, 11 planes were required to carry the leader of the Italian armada and his staff to the official reception in Washington.

Irish History Urged for U.S. Schools

Chicago, July 20 (AP)—A resolution recommending that the history of the Irish people be given more importance in education was adopted today at the 58th national convention of the Ancient Order of Hibernians.

It was urged that Irish history be included in the curricula of colleges and universities, in all public, private and parochial schools, and that Hibernians in each jurisdiction of the organization work to that end.

To encourage study of Celtic history, the resolution suggested that members of the order form study clubs. Re-establishment of the National Irish History Prize of the Hibernians was also urged.

Finally, the convention went on record as resolving not only to talk the history of the Irish people, but make it by associating themselves with all major Irish and Catholic activities.

30 TEACHERS IN BUS FIRE

Thirty Hawaiian school teachers, men and women, narrowly escaped being burned to death today when a Boston-to-Providence bus caught fire on the state highway in Plainville and was destroyed.

The teachers, members of a party of 65 touring the United States, scrambled out of the blazing bus after it was quickly halted on the four-lane highway, near Attleboro, by the driver, Norman Ritsson of 107 Oxford st., Cambridge.

Fire apparatus from Plainville and North Attleboro responded to an alarm for the fire which started, it is believed, from an overheated brake shoe on a rear wheel.

The party of 65 school teachers were in two buses, the bus which caught on fire being in the rear. The first bus continued on to Providence with the other 35 teachers, while another bus was sent from Providence to take in the stranded 30.

FAMILY GIVES ELLIOTT FREE REIN TO WED

Young Roosevelt Says He Could Act Now if He Desired

Chicago, July 20 (INS)—Stating he will "neither affirm nor deny" that he intends to marry Ruth Googins, Fort Worth, Tex., society girl, Elliott Roosevelt, 22-year-old son of President Roosevelt, was kept busy today trying to elude reporters.

In the company of Miss Googins and Mrs. Anna Roosevelt Dall, Elliott's sister, the President's son is spending a brief vacation here visiting the Century of Progress Exposition.

On her arrival Mrs. Dall denied rumors that the reported betrothal of Miss Googins to Elliott prompted the journey from New York. Questions concerning reports that she had been sent here by the Roosevelt family to halt the rumored romance met with vigorous denials from Mrs. Dall.

"Elliott and I are fond of each other and Chicago was a halfway point for me to visit with him. I couldn't go all the way West to meet him."

When asked if there were any legal or family objections against him marrying "today or tomorrow" Roosevelt answered:

"No, I could be married today if I wanted."

"If it were just up to the family he could marry at any time," interposed President Roosevelt's daughter.

ANSWER READY FOR HIM

Ruth Googins, of Fort Worth, Tex., insists that rumors of romance between she and Elliott Roosevelt, who just a few days ago was divorced from his wife, are unfounded. This denial comes from Chicago, where Miss Googins is staying and, despite her insistence that there is no truth in report of romance, it is known that the President's son, arriving in Chicago by plane, called on Miss Ruth. Being asked about the story of "Dan Cupid's doings," Elliott replied, "Really, you haven't given me time to ask her yet."

'POWER TRUST' LAMP GRAB CLAIMED

Independent Concerns See Fate in the Big Trade Monopoly

Washington, July 20 (INS)—The "power trust" was charged today with seeking to perpetuate a monopoly in the electric light industry by slipping over a monopolistic "fair business" code on the Roosevelt administration.

Spokesmen for independent lamp manufacturers declared they would be driven out of business by inclusion in the code, drawn for the administration by the National Electrical Manufacturers Ass'n. The independents charged this association merely acted for the "power trust" and was dominated by the General Electric and Westinghouse Electric companies.

The proposed code for the electrical industry also was attacked by representatives of washing machine, radio, vacuum cleaners, telephone apparatus and gas appliance manufacturers. Each group demanded the right to form a 'fair business' code for its own particular industry and protested against being included in the electrical code prepared by the National Electric Manufacturers Association.

The International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers also protested against allowing the manufacturers' association to supervise the code.

President Roosevelt today had reorganized the federal power commission and made it ready to fight power trust high finance and exploitation of the public.

He accepted the resignation of George Otis Smith as chairman and designated Frank R. McNinch, North Carolina Democrat and an outstanding Liberal, to succeed him. Basil Manly, a recent appointee formerly associated with the New York Power authority, became vice-chairman.

Declaring the administration of the power industry "a public trust," McNinch warned:

"No honestly administered power company has anything to fear from this commission, but crooked ones would do well to make straight their paths."

TWO-WAY CRIME PROBE LOOMS IN STATE

Warner Seen as Ready to Act Independently of Legislature

The possibility of two state-wide crime investigations was seen today, following the announcement of Atty.-Gen. Warner on the basis of a legislative authorization of a crime commission, that he would rid the Commonwealth of "untouchables."

The attorney-general's statement, made at the annual outing of the Quincy Republican city committee at Pemberton, was considered significant as the legislative joint committee on judiciary had ignored him in empowering Governor Ely to appoint a crime commission.

The authority was given with the stipulation that one of the three members of the commission must be a judge of the Superior court. The committee ignored Atty.-Gen. Warner's suggestion that he be equipped with broad powers as a dictator in the suppression of crime, with authority to raid and arrest without warrants.

In his speech at Pemberton the attorney-general said that gangsters have virtually established a sovereignty of their own in Massachusetts, and have no fear either of the courts or of law enforcement agencies.

The crime commission would be authorized to "make a thorough investigation into the practice and procedure followed throughout the commonwealth, in the apprehension and conviction of gangs, gangsters, racketeers and other persistent violators of the law, engaged in the operation of pools and lotteries, slot machines, chartered clubs dispensing intoxicating liquors, so-called speakeasies and other illegal practices."

It was also directed to investigate the activities of individuals repeatedly brought before the courts without being convicted, in an endeavor to learn the cause of the failure to convict.

Washington, July 20 (INS) A threatened rise in prices in some cases as high as 100 per cent, within the next 30 to 60 days," was revealed by Hugh S. Johnson, national industrial recovery administrator, today. He warned that this is why he is rushing to the President a blanket code of hours and wages to build up purchasing power to meet the rise.

One of his principal concerns, he said, is the unorganized "white collar" employee and it is with them in mind that he is striving to work out the blanket code, to insure that the "forgotten man" shall not be swamped by the anticipated run-away prices.

Johnson warned again that any unjustified price hoisting will be drastically met.

Hitler Starts Raid on Private Wealth

Berlin, July 20 (AP)—In an endeavor to find Marxist parties' funds and to ascertain who have foreign bank accounts, police officials advertised today that a reward would be given persons divulging such information.

The move is preliminary to the confiscation of the sums provided for in a Cabinet decree issued last week ordering the seizure of private fortunes and even citizenship rights of "enemies of the state and the people."

PRESIDENT HAS EYE ON STOCKS

Washington, July 20 (UB)—Alarmed at the unbridled gambling in grain, commodity and stock markets, brought to the fore by today's bear market operations, President Roosevelt is considering new means of controlling the nation's stock markets, it was learned tonight.

The huge recessions in the New York Stock Exchange yesterday as well as the tremendous drops in wheat prices on the Chicago Board of Trade, convinced administration leaders that the long deferred control of market operations must be undertaken.

Otherwise, they fear the controlled inflation, now in progress, will get out of hand.

The administration is now studying methods of supervising the stock exchanges. It expects to offer legislation at the next session of Congress, giving the government even more rigorous control over securities issues than is now possessed.

The President is determined not to allow stock gamblers to wreck the recovery program he believes is now under way in a fashion to guarantee real business recovery.

FAIR WAGES FOR ALL PLEDGED

Washington, July 20 (INS)—Payment of a "fair living wage" on the vast public works projects to be undertaken with funds from the $3,300,000,000 bond issue was assured today.

Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins—who has been a crusader against sweat shop wages—was asked by Secretary of the Interior Ickes as public administrator to help devise a wage scale to be enforced.

The wage scale is expected to apply to highway work to be financed by the Federal Government, state and municipal projects constructed with government loans and federal public works where the prevailing wage law is not effective.

The real reason for recall of the W&J Department's proposal to spend $200,000,000 on flood control and rivers and harbors projects was reported to be Miss Perkins' objections to the present wage scale.

Rhode Island Silk Mill Strike Spreads

Providence, R. I., July 20 (INS)—Coincident with the strike of 300 more workers in the Royal Weaving Co. silk plant in Pawtucket, bringing the total number out in 12 silk mills to 2100, labor union officials announced today that settlements by individual mills would be recognized.

FARLEY'S O. K. FOR O'CONNELL

Entrance of Postmaster James A. Farley into the Boston mayoralty situation is claimed today by many Democrats as the first important development in the campaign of former Congressman Joseph F. O'Connell for that office.

Several weeks ago it was first revealed by the Boston Evening American that secret efforts were being made by the O'Connell group to bring Farley here to appeal for election of a Democrat as mayor.

At that time it said by men close to O'Connell that Farley would not be asked to give formal indorsement to any candidate but that the Brighton attorney would be the only contender to appear on any platform with him and the public would draw its own conclusions.

Another development which may have bearing on the expected Farley-O'Connell alliance came to light today when it was learned that O'Connell's associates are considering plans for a parade of 10,000 of his supporters through the downtown section on Sept. 15, with a mass meeting on Boston Common.

Heap Firewater Burns Up "Injun's" Honeymoon

Big Chief Edward Muse, through whose veins flows the fiery blood of his Indian forefathers, went on the whoopee warpath and woke up this morning facing charges of creating a disturbance and drunkenness.

According to the story told Judge Rowe in Brockton court, Big Chief Muse married an Indian squaw, Juanita White Eagle, last Sunday, but just who married him he could not remember.

After the wedding ceremonial supper, which was held at the bride's home in Taunton, Edward returned to Lake Nip, on the outskirts of Bridgewater, where he is engaged in trapping.

Yesterday his squaw came to the Muse tepee, bringing with her her household goods, as prescribed in the best Indian manner.

But when her Big Chief refused to pay the driver the money due him for carting the stuff, then little White Eagle threw over the traces of married life, and also threw the keys to his home back in the Big Chief's face. After which she returned to the family wigwam in Taunton.

Early this morning Big Chief Eddie partook well of firewater. Then he drew his trusty tomahawk and laid it well about him, scaling every piece of furniture in his tepee.

Then came Patrolman O'Leary. Then a trip to the hoose-gow.

This morning Judge Rowe suspended a month's sentence and placed Big Chief on probation six months.

Boy Shot by Sweetheart Who Spurned Dare

Linden, N. J., July 20 (INS)—Eighteen-year-old Claudean Wheeler shot and critically wounded John ("Buddy") Crumpacker, 19, after he told her he was "tired of living," but she did not know the gun was loaded, the girl told police today.

Miss Wheeler was hysterical when police began questioning her. She said she and Crumpacker had been to a party and were sitting in his car outside his home when he said:

"The sooner I croak the better."

The girl said she thought he was fooling and suggested,

"If you've got a gun I'll shoot you now."

"I don't believe you," she said Crumpacker responded.

"Yes, I will," she insisted.

She told police Crumpacker got out of the car and said:

"Come on. I have a gun upstairs."

The girl said she walked upstairs to the second floor and into a bedroom. Crumpacker's parents were not at home, she said.

The youth handed her a revolver. She told police she asked Crumpacker if the gun was loaded and that he said it was.

"I thought he was fooling," she said, "and I squeezed the trigger."

NUDISTS SECURE AS STATE POLICE HUNT FOR 'STOP' ORDER

PASTOR IS HEAD OF UNCLAD COLONY

30 Persons Mingle as Police Start War in Berkshires

By ARTHUR J. QUINN
Boston Evening American Staff Correspondent

Otis, July 20 — State troopers, under pressure by the Watch and Ward Society, were stalking Massachusetts' nudist colony today in these Berkshire hills in the launching of a war against the unclad.

Thirty men, women and children, calling themselves the Burgoyne Trail Associates, are the objectives in the police and Watch and Ward drive to rid the state of its single nudist colony.

Each day, except when they gather for meals, the nudists disport in their camp just outside Otis, innocent of clothing and with both sexes mingling, but so shy are they in the public eye that they slipped on a garment here and a garment there today to avoid shocking the sensibilities of this reporter.

MINISTER HEADS COLONY

And while the nudists and the Evening American representative talked, the state troopers, under the Watch and Ward urge, were attempting to find through what legal loophole they could shut the camp or compel the colonists to wear some clothing.

The campaign against the Bay State nudists was launched through a Watch and Ward Society letter to Brig.-Gen. Daniel Needham, state commissioner of public safety.

In the letter it was charged that the camp director, Dr. Henry S. Huntington, former Scarsdale, N. Y., minister and declared head of the midist movement in America, is conducting an institution "revolting to every normal citizen." Dr. Huntington is assisted at the camp by Isley Boone of Otis.

AFTER SOUND BODIES

A man in his middle forties, short, spare and ascetic, Dr. Huntington was smilingly tolerant today of the uplift group's latest campaign, and said he is perfectly confident no law has been broken.

In an interview with the Evening American he painted a glowing picture of an existence untrammeled by the clothing which civilization generally deems essential.

His philosophy is of the medieval scholastics, "mens sana in corpore sano"—a sound mind in a sound body. He elaborated on his views during a drive along the state highway to the back road leading to the colony deep in the woods, and he was most insistent that his enterprise is neither a colony nor a cult but a health camp or club.

"This is a nudist camp," he said. "Our goal is the healthy mind in the healthy body. This is not only a creed but a way of life. Sunlight and air are vital conditions of human wellbeing. We believe these elements are insufficiently used in present day life to the detriment of physical and moral health.

NEW SOCIAL PRACTICE

"For the purpose of health and recreation, and for the conditioning of man to his world we accept a new social practice based on the known wholesome value of exposure to these elements and in the staunch spirit of naturalness, carefulness, cleanliness of

Leon Barzin Goes 'Tarzan' in Symphony Debut

New York, July 20 (AP)—Leon Barzin, a lean young fellow with a penchant for yellow neckties and desire to take the "stiff neck attitude" out of symphony concerts, makes his debut tonight as guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra.

Four years ago Barzin, who is 33, played as second and solo violinist with the Philharmonic and to wield the baton over men with whom he played awes him not a bit.

"I'm just 'Tarzan' to that bunch —the guy who used to play second violin," he said.

Barzin is unimpressed with what he defines as "Majesty" in conductors.

"They ought to quit wearing stiff collars" he said. "I don't see the importance of that sort of thing. What's more I'm in favor of taking the stiff neck attitude out of concert recitals. Formality in conducting has its place, but it's been stressed too much."

What would he wear for his debut?

"Flannels, a yellow tie—something like that—."

STATE CZAR ON FOOD PRICES FAVORED

Committee's O. K. for the Bill Giving Ely Greater Control

An amendment to the law authorizing the Governor to appoint a food administrator in times of emergency, to protect the public from being gouged in buying necessaries of life, was reported favorable today by the Legislative Committee on State Administration.

At present the Governor has this power over fuel. It is on his suggestion that the act be extended to include food.

Ralph W. Robart, director of the division on the necessaries of life, told the committee today at a public hearing, that his division now has authority to investigate food prices, but that a situation might develop where more drastic action would be necessary.

While not an advocate of price fixing, he said, the division should be in the position to make it impossible for anyone attempting to take advantage of present conditions through exorbitant price demands.

Sen. Charles G. Miles and Rep. Hyman Manevitch of Boston supported the bill and complained bitterly of the price advances made in bread and potatoes. Miles charged that potatoes have been jumped from 20 cents to 60 cents a peck in his district and meat and chops jacked up as high as 8 cents a pound.

Charles L. Manser, secretary of the Independent Merchants Association of Retail Stores, claimed that no recovery plan can succeed under which government salaries are decreased.

Aimee in New Move to Halt Divorce

By A. M. ROCHLEN

Copyright, 1933, by Universal Service

Los Angeles, July 20—In an exclusive radio interview made possible by a series of wireless communications across thousands of miles of land and sea, Aimee Semple McPherson Hutton today made another effort to sweep aside minor difficulties between her and Dave Hutton, and reiterated the hope that they can continue their lives together.

Somewhat recovered from the stunning blow of being sued for divorce the day after she sailed from France, the blonde evangelist gave her first coherent opinions of what led to the domestic tragedy, and told how she planned to meet the situation when she arrives in America next Tuesday.

NEVER PLANNED DIVORCE

She denied ever having planned to "beat Dave to the punch" by filing a Paris divorce, the motive said to have prompted her portly spouse to take action in the California courts without any notice to Aimee.

"Never have I considered divorcing Mr. Hutton," she replied to questions on her own plans and to Dave's own assertion that "Sister Aimee was attempting to lure him to Paris so she could serve him with legal papers."

"The misunderstanding at Angelus Temple was regrettable," she continued.

"These misunderstandings arose after Mr. Hutton sent me on a health cruise.

"I think he felt a theatrical line incompatible with my evangelism and embarrassing to me, hence the proposed divorce."

The evangelist was asked if she had any indication that the baritone was unhappy or no longer in love with her.

"His letters, written a fortnight ago, brim with loving devotion and eagerness for my return," she radioed in reply.

"I am still completely in love with him,' she added.

And then, in the face of Dave's silence to her direct appeals for his love and confidence, and the wire-leased information that he and his new manager have given out interviews declaring they are "through" with the pastor of Angelus Temple, she stated:

HOLDS OUT FOR PEACE

"I console myself with the faith that when the business tangles are adjusted, the clouds will quickly roll away and we will live happy ever after."

Then, at the close, as if to hold out the olive branch of peace, she added:

"I am entirely satisfied with David's church work and that of my splendid associates."

Meanwhile verbal darts between Hutton and Miss Harriet Jordan, chief lieutenant of the evangelist at Angelus Temple, continued unabated.

"Any man who would make public such intimate letters as a prelude to his vaudeville tour—well, he's just beyond me," Miss Jordan said.

Hutton reiterated his threat to start talking and "blow the lid off Angelus Temple if they don't quit talking down there."

BURGLARS ROB HOME NEAR NEEDHAM'S

Newtonville House Is Looted While the Folks Are Absent

Burglars, especially skeptical of police efficiency, today robbed the fashionable home of Alfred S. Black, 3 Whittier rd., Newtonville, directly across from the residence of the state police head, Gen. Daniel Needham.

The robbers entered by way of a cellar bulkhead.

The burglary was discovered by Black's caretaker, Frank Jeraldi, who ran across the street and notified Mrs. Needham of the robbery. She called local police.

This is the second break in the Black residence since the family's departure for their summer home in Mississippi. Last spring burglars broke into the garage and stole several articles from the chauffeur's room.

Police have wired the owner, a wealthy food dealer, to ascertain just what valuables were in the house in order to check for stolen property.

6 DRIVERS FACE COURT IN 'L' RATE WAR

10-Cent Fare Is Called Unfair to the Road, Attorney Claims

The first blow in the battle now raging between the Boston Elevated Railway Co. and the independent taxicab drivers of the city was struck today when six of the cab drivers were in municipal court charged with violating a city ordinance which prohibits unfair competition by cabs and motor vehicles.

The defendants were arraigned before Judge Good on complaint of John T. Hughes, attorney for the railway company. He charged them with picking up fares and bringing them into central Boston at 10 cents each, the same fare charged by the railway company.

Hughes told the court that the company was losing a great deal of business through what he termed "this unfair practise."

Defense Atty. Frederick R. Walsh asked for a dismissal before a hearing on the merits of the case. He argued that the case failed to come under Judge Good's jurisdiction and claimed that the only person with authority to act in the case was Police Commissioner Hultman.

"The police commissioner has complete jurisdiction over the rules and regulations as regards taxicabs," Walsh argued, "and the present controversy should rightfully come under his authority."

Taking the matter under advisement, Judge Good continued the hearing for tomorrow.

Woman Asks $25,000 for Truck Injuries

Miss Teresa Plunkett of Brooklyn, N. Y., filed suit in Federal court today for $25,000 against John J. Jones of Brooks ave., Arlington, for alleged injuries received by her when struck by a truck.

She stated the truck was driven by Jones and owned by the Fanny Farmer Candy Stores, Inc. The accident occurred while she was crossing Dewey sq. on July 15, 1932.

NAB SUSPECT IN THREE BREAKS

Brookline police believe they have solved the mystery surrounding a series of house and apartment burglaries with the arrest today of a man who gave his name as Charles R. Burton, of New York, temporarily living in Beacon st., Brookline.

Burton was arrested early today by Sergt. Alexander Minnis, and charged with three new breaks.

In court, he pleaded guilty to two of them, denied having any part in the other.

He was held in $7000 bail until July 28.

The breaks occurred in the homes of Dr. George W. Dyson of 99 Colbourn Crescent, where the thief escaped with a pair of trousers and $26; the home of Frederick W. Rink, 3 Strathmore rd., where jewels were stolen, and Jonathan Kinicls, 43 Beaconsfield rd.

the body and mind that they symbolize.

"We regard the body neither as an object of shame or a subject of levity or erotic exploitation. Anyone whose attitude or behaviour is inconsistent with such a view is being contrary to the whole spirit of the associates and is not wanted."

Huntington explained that the title, "Burgoyne Trail Associates," was selected because "Gentleman Johnny" Burgoyne, British Revolutionary general whose folly cost him an army, is supposed to have traversed the present site of the camp on a march to Boston.

CAMP WELL SCREENED

The tract leased by the group is part of the old Judge Robinson estate, located a quarter mile outside of Otis Center. It is removed from the traveled road and well screened from the gaze of the curious.

In the center of the mile square reservation is the main and only building. It rests on the summit of a "hogback" hill overlooking dense woodlands.

It is a two and a half story wooden building painted a dull red. The second floor contains six sleeping rooms. The lower floor is devoted to a common room. An open wing on the right of the building gives the nudists opportunity to have the benefit of the sun while at meals.

Clustered around the main building is a miniature city of tents where those whose love of nature is irked by the confinement of wooden walls may have still more freedom.

Two vegetable gardens, one just outside the front door and the other at the rear, give the group an opportunity to satisfy their agrarian instincts and at the same time add to the larder.

The 30 persons of assorted sexes reported to be members of the "Associates" must be very healthful. Few were in sight when the Evening American's correspondent inspected the place and none was really nude, Dr. Huntington explained that he had instructed the members to clothe themselves for the visit, as he did not wish anyone unacquainted with the colony's principles to be shocked.

One woman, who described herself as Mrs. Gertrude von Hauffman, 27, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was clad in a waist and shorts. She hastened to assure that this was not the usual costume but merely adopted for the occasion.

She pointed out an artificial pool located in a patch of woods some distance from the main house. Her men, women and children swim together entirely unclad.

CLOTHES ARE BARRED

She added that clothes are taboo except at meal time and when the "campers" retire to their quarters.

A typical nudist day includes rising at 6:30 a. m. followed by an hour of group calisthenics. Then follows breakfast, after which all are free to amuse themselves and bask in the sun. More hours in the sun follow a light lunch and then dinner. In the evening all gathered in the main building.

An annual membership fee is paid, and board and room furnished.

WHY Schlitz In Brown Bottles IS FIRST

THE answer is short. It has a flavor superior to that of other beers.

Why is it better? Because SCHLITZ scientists have solved a problem that puzzled the best minds in the brewing industry for many years. SCHLITZ has worked out a secret control of enzymes in beer.

What are enzymes? They are mysterious substances that exist in all living cells. There are many kinds of enzymes. Each kind has its own particular job.

Some enzymes produce a pure brew and some enzymes produce a brew which is actually injurious to health.

Never mind the details. It is sufficient to state that the enzymes digest the different ingredients until they go into solution—which we know as beer. But—the enzymatic activities must be controlled. How to control them is a SCHLITZ secret.

You know that any brewer can put malt, hops, yeast and water together—but unless the enzymatic action is skillfully controlled the result is a rank, ropy beer that may produce indigestion or be harmful otherwise.

But SCHLITZ in Brown Bottles—The Beer That Made Milwaukee Famous—is healthful, uniform, sparkling, brilliant. It is a health giving, predigested food.

Drink SCHLITZ freely. It is good and good for you. It is fully fermented at the brewery—it will not make you bilious because it is brewed under perfect enzymatic control. The Brown Bottle protects its goodness from the brewery to your glass.

By the case or in the attractive SCHLITZ Handy Six.

CONNIE LAUGHS AT RUMORS OF DIVORCE

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Copyright, 1933, by Universal Service Inc.

Hollywood, July 20—Constance Bennett admits that she has gone to the fights, to the home of friends for dinner and to the tennis matches with Gilbert Roland. She also says that she will continue to go places with him if she feels so disposed.

Connie, with fire in her eyes, cheeks pink with anger said:

"It may surprise some of these people, who write of my divorce from the Marquis de la Falaise and my forthcoming marriage to Gilbert Roland, to know that Henri is fully aware that I like Gilbert Roland and go out with him.

"We talked it over before Henri went to the British East Indies to shoot scenes for his picture and he said it would be foolish for me to lock myself up and stay at home. I like Gilbert Roland very much and I'm not going to allow malicious gossip to spoil that friendship.

"One thing that Henri and I have never discussed is a divorce, and the one thing at this moment that is farthest from my mind is the thought of seeking my freedom," said Constance. "Do you think for a moment that I would plan such a thing when my husband is miles away. I am not that sort of a person. You know me well enough to know that above all things I am truthful and frank. Too truthful, perhaps, for my own good. I hate deceit, that's why I have made enemies."

Connie fingered a cablegram while she talked. It had just arrived from Henri. She handed it to me to read. Couched in affectionate terms he told her that he was coming home. He arrives in Hong Kong July 28 and in Hollywood August 25.

Gilbert was chosen to play opposite Connie because Marian Cooper feels that he is exactly suited to the role.

Treasury Tenders Asked

Washington, July 20—Acting Secretary Hewes has invited tenders for $80,000,000 of 91 day bill to be sold to the highest bidder next Monday.

EVERETT CRIME LID TO BE BLOWN OFF

which is due to reach such a startling climax was begun through the persistence of Rep. Albert E. Morris and Atty. James J. Irwin, both of Everett.

These two men put their version of conditions up to Dewitt C. DeWolf, secretary to Gov. Ely, four months ago but had a difficult time convincing him that things were as bad as they painted them. Finally they were referred to Dist. Atty Warren L. Bishop.

Their next reference was to the Malden district court but the two men declined to go there. Their perseverance led to an order by Bishop to Judge Crafts to go into the matter.

JUDGE CRAFTS AMAZED

Judge Crafts assigned one investigator, then more amazed himself at the state of affairs exposed, he is now prepared for fr and jury investigation. While refusing to comment at this time, he said he might make the list of witnesses public late this week.

A startling list it will be.

In the course of his investigation, the man assigned by Judge Crafts to lead the probe received threats against his life as a result of which he applied for, and obtained, a permit from the Everett police to carry a revolver.

The investigation, I learned, started with fire department matters, then turned to injury on the $500,000 or more spent for a school building which the schoolhouse commission has refused to accept, on the ground that it is leaky and fails in various ways to meet contract specifications.

It wasn't long before the scope of the probe was widened.

The investigators discovered that Everett people and residents of surrounding cities had been the victims of a ring that circulated counterfeit tickets on the popular Irish Sweepstakes lottery. Prominent Everett men were named.

Going into this phase, the probe Leaders in investigation of Everett racketeering and suspicious gentlemen contacted a man who made the tickets were printed, a man who sold the paper and a man who did the printing. This is believed to make this angle of the investigation ironclad.

At the same time information regarding slot-machines and other gambling came to the attention of the investigators. Huge profits had been reaped in some of the gambling places.

Still worse, drugs were being sold and Everett young people were being introduced to this habit and made victims of it, without their parents being aware in the slightest degree of what was going on.

TWO DEATHS IN PROBE

The death of Fred Voight of Quincy, who once admitted he was in the "nigger pool" business, came into the inquiry when reports were received that he paid $28,000 to an official shortly before his death. understand that Voight's wife will be a grand jury witness. Voight died last February and his death was officially declared accidental after poison had first been suspected.

I have also learned that Voight had he lived, would have been a witness in an important court action involving conditions in Everett.

The other death which enters more or less indirectly into the inquiry is that of a banker of considerable prominence but just what connection this has with the probe I will have to leave to the grand jury.

The school building matter will probably be taken up first. The original appropriation was $450,000 to which $62,000 was added. The investigators have gone thoroughly into the results obtained for this huge expenditure.

The political situation looms large in the reports of the investigators. A political enemy of the administration was recently named to a city position, much to the surprise of Everett citizens, and this has further scrambled a situation that has puzzled more than one voter for months past.

KIDNAPERS ON SPOT IN BIG ROUNDUP

KIDNAP TALLY

By Associated Press.

The tide appeared to be turning against the kidnaping racket today.

Complete failure in an apparent attempt at kidnaping was scored against abductors in Philadelphia when the victim—Frank A. McClatchy, 56-year-old real estate dealer—dared to put up a fight. McClatchy, however, was shot and seriously wounded.

Police in St. Louis arrested five suspects, three of them women, in the case of August Luer, well-to-do Alton, Ill., banker, recently liberated by kidnapers.

Hope diminished for the safe return of 24-year-old John J. O'Connell kidnaped Albany National Guard lieutenant.

Washington, July 20 (AP)—The federal government is going after kidnapers first and ask questions afterward.

Until this assertion came today from Joseph B. Keenan, assistant attorney-general heading the anti-racketeer move, there had been some doubt. Belief had been expressed that the government could take no part in a kidnaping unless in some way or another it crossed state lines or violated specific federal statutes.

But this was Keenan's answer today to a question about that:

"We don't know whether a kidnaping case comes under Federal jurisdiction until we have found the man.

"We are going after them. We will find out after we have found our men, with the aid of state authorities, if it is a Federal or a state case."

Keenan was unwilling to say whether the forces under his direction had been, or would be, augmented.

Frequently in the last few days Keenan has conferred with White House aides. That led to expressions, which he would not confirm, that when the time came—soon—President Roosevelt would be ready to put Federal forces at work pending changes in the law by the next session of Congress.

Authors Warned of Letters to King

London, July 20 (AP)—A gentle warning to authors and others who might be tempted to become too free with letters or papers addressed to King George "or any of his majesty's predecessors" was contained in a communique from Buckingham Palace.

PAWTUCKET AND LYNN GIRLS WIN FAIR TRIPS

Two girls, one a teacher in the public schools of Pawtucket, R. I., and the other a student at English high school in Lynn are the winners of the two free trips to the World's Fair in Chicago offered by the Boston American and Sunday Advertiser in the Beauty Judging Contest for the best definitions of feminine beauty.

The winners are Dorothy G. Quimby, of 87 Fayette st., Lynn, and Anna W. McGarrity, of 8 Pearl st., Pawtucket, R. I.

Both will leave some Saturday next month on a personally conducted tour to the Century of Progress Exposition which is being sponsored by the Baeur Travel Service, 182 Tremont st., Boston.

The Baeur Travel Service has arranged hundreds of such tours this summer for New Englanders and Miss Quimby and Miss McGarrity will be members of one of these tourist parties sometime next month. The exact date will be fixed later at their convenience. The trip will start on a Saturday evening leaving South Station for Buffalo, N. Y. A stopover will be made in Buffalo and a side trip will be made to Niagara Falls. From Buffalo the trip will be on boat to Detroit where side trips will be made to Belle Isle Park and to Royal Oak, Mich., the home of Father Coughlin. Then on to Chicago where four days will be spent at the World's Fair.

Both contestant were more than delighted when they were informed of their good fortune this morning.

"It's the first contest I ever entered," Miss Quimby said, "And to think that I really won one of the trips to Chicago is really unbelievable."

Miss McGarrity, a teacher of the Fifth grade in Garden st., school in Pawtucket, was located at the Rhode Island Normal school in Providence where she is a special summer student and notified that she, too, won a trip to the World's Fair.

"I just entered the contest for the fun of it," Miss McGarrity said "I really never expected to win anything."

An additional offer of 50 pairs of tickets to "Gold Diggers of 1933," the musical picture production showing this week at the Majestic Theater, was made for the next best 50 definitions of feminine beauty. These winners have been selected and the tickets were mailed to each winning contestants last night.

It will be an all day affair starting with a boat ride to Nantasket where mothers and children can "take in" the attractions in Paragon Park. There will be a special booth at Rowes Wharf where coupons printed in next Saturday's American may be redeemed on Monday by mothers and children giving them half rates for the round trip to Nantasket. The round trip for mothers accompanied by children will be 25 cents; while the round trip for children will cost only 10 cents each.

LIGGETT GROUP HEARS HOPPE

Take a chance, do something concrete and avoid conservatism in business was the advice given to more than 200 fountain employes and executives of the Liggett Drug Stores by Adolph B. Hoppe, national sales manager at a banquet held in the Hotel Bradford last night.

The banquet was tendered the employes through the courtesy of the Whiting milk companies, Jersey Ice Cream and Kraft Phenix Cheese Co.

Hoppe declared that concerted action on the part of all employes was necessary in order that the present conditions might be remedied.

"When we put a show or a sale on," he said, "we must get everybody hot and hotheezy. Get them interested. It can be done. Procrastination must be wiped out of business. Do it now should be the by-word."

Among the other speakers were the following: John Cronin, of the Jersey Ice Cream Co.; Daniel P. Howes, representing the Kraft Phenix Cheese Co.; Robert A. Burns, of the Whiting Milk Co.; and J. E. Mahoney, of the Liggett chain.

America's greatest 25c motor oil
THE Contest Board of the American Automobile Association recently put 4 famous 25c oils "on the spot" . . .
One after another, these famous oils were put in 6 borrowed cars—and tested for 4 days, 12 hours a day, on the Indianapolis Speedway.
When the figures were averaged, here was the amazing result—Gulf-lube went 28½% farther before a quart of oil had to be added. It beat every oil in every car!
Switch to Gulf-lube! You'll buy less oil. You'll pay less for repairs—for the oil that lasts longer is a better lubricant. Get Gulf-lube at any Gulf station!

I'm strong for sunshine
— so I'm strong for "Toasting"
I've always found that really good reasons are the simplest reasons. For instance, I know that sunshine mellows and heat purifies. "Toasting" is therefore very easy for me to understand. And very easy for me to appreciate—because—my sense of the fastidious is so very exacting. You see, I'm always aware of the fact that my cigarette comes in such intimate contact with my lips. Quite naturally, it's the purity of "Toasting" that I single out for special praise. It's just my own personal feminine reason for saying "Luckies Please!"

Haverholt Scolds Patricia for Bad Bridge Play in Front of Guests

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

Fear that Bill McGee, the racketeer, would wreak vengeance on her and her family if she refused to go out with him, caused lovely Patricia Warren to accept his invitations. Bill is shot by a rival gangster while in Pat's company. Pat rushes home in terror and her stepmother puts her out, saying the police are looking for Pat. Unable to find employment, Pat resorts to her card skill and plays professional bridge. Julian Haverholt, noted bridge expert, makes her his partner. While they are discussing business details at his home, Clark Tracy, the polo player and Pat's secret love, calls. She had met him once, but he does not recognize her. Haverholt introduces Pat as his niece. Accustomed to poverty, Pat revels in the luxury of her surroundings. Next day Haverholt lends her money for clothes and they go on a shopping tour.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

PATRICIA sat down, feeling flat and foolish and injured. Without troubling to introduce her to the others Haverholt resumed his contemplation of the cards. The young men were smoking. One of them in dumb pantomime offered his case to Patricia. She took a cigarette. She was about to speak when Haverholt, pushing back his cards, said unexpectedly:

"I'm ready to begin."

"I'm not," Patricia wanted to say.

Instead she curtly acknowledged introduction to George Twine and to Hollis Gordon. Those two did not appear to consider Haverholt's conduct unusual. They seemed grateful to be here at all, grateful and awed. They almost tiptoed to their places at the table. Patricia, tight-lipped, took her place opposite Haverholt. Still grumbling at the delay, he shuffled the cards. They all cut. The play began.

Patricia grimly settled down to business. She and Haverholt would have a long talk afterwards. She would not be treated as an erring child. He must realize that! She had been eager to show what an apt and clever pupil she was; she had innocently counted upon impressing him with the erratic brilliance of her game. Haverholt in a few cutting words disabused her of those fond fancies. He despised the erratic player. He didn't choose for her to be brilliant.

"I'll take care of the brilliance," he snapped, after in her own estimation she had played a hand particularly well. "When there are any trick leads to be made I'll make them. I want conventional leads from you, nothing else. I want to be able to read your holdings at all times."

Patricia's cheeks reddened. She could not but have added another black mark to the score mounting against Julian Haverholt. The maddening part of the affair was that the others, George Twine and Hollis Gordon, openly sided with Haverholt. They listened to his every word as if each word were inspired. As for Patricia, they considered her a worm as they were wont to themselves.

CHEEKS RED

"What I want from you, Patricia," declared Haverholt, "what I'm going to have, is steadiness. You stick to the book and we'll get along."

George and Hollis nodded solemnly. Patricia's cheeks grew redder, her eyes brighter. Then and there she determined to show Haverholt that she was as capable of skill and subtlety and finesse as he was. He wanted a conservative game from her, did he? She would show him that she had got beyond that stage. The next hand gave her a chance. Hollis opened with one heart. Patricia held six spades to the Queen, Jack had nothing else. She blithely bid one spade. After George passed Haverholt jumped the bid to four spades.

"Double," Hollis sang out triumphantly.

"Content," said Patricia, who was anything but content.

To her horror Haverholt redoubled. Even after he had exposed his cards she knew that making the contract was impossible. His hand was good; her own was simply not good enough. She went down three tricks.

"I could have made two spades," she offered uncertainly, "I lost the third trick trying for game."

"Let me see what you bid on."

requested Haverholt, who knew perfectly well what she had bid on. Reluctantly Patricia spread the cards for this inspection.

"Six spades to the Queen Jack and not another honor," Haverholt pointed out. He said gently, "I thought we had decided that you weren't going to open your mouth with less than a trick and a half."

DEFENSIVE BID

"It was a defensive bid. I didn't know you were going to carry me to four."

"You could have made four if you'd held the trick and a half I counted on your having. We'll have no more bids like that, if you please, distribution or no distribution, defensive or not," said Haverholt confidently.

Patricia stood by her guns.

"You made an opening bid a few minutes ago with a hand pack high," she observed. "The only difference is that you called yours a psychic."

"Are you suggesting that you might improve my play?"

Haverholt's voice was dangerously calm. Patricia looked up. The man's face was dead white. She felt frightened, confused. She stammered an apology. He seemed not to hear it.

He said quietly, "I'm the greatest bridge player in the world; I give you an opportunity that few ever even get to anyone else; I give you time that only a millionaire could afford to buy, and you tell me how to play bridge. You tell me, Julian Haverholt, how to play bridge."

"I—I—" The girl stammered.

His gentle, deadly voice overrode protests, excuses, apologies.

"Don't talk to me, Patricia. You haven't anything to say worth listening to. You haven't even the wit to listen when others have. You're too anxious to display your own piquante, pitiful accomplishments to bother with that."

Suddenly, leaning forward Haverholt swept the disputed cards from her hands and from the table to the floor. Whereupon he turned on his heel and stalked from the room. George darted in pursuit. Hollis lingered to say:

SHE UPSET HIM

"He didn't mean half he said. He was upset. You upset him by—"

He was addressing the empty air. Patricia too was gone. She got upstairs to her own rooms, flung herself across the chaise lounge and burst into tears. If only she could stop crying she would leave this house forever.

Half an hour later Haverholt found her there still sobbing. She heard him enter. She sat up, dabbing at her reddened eyes and faced him hostilely. His own anger he has spent itself. So far as he was concerned the storm was over.

"Well, Patricia," he inquired with great cheerfulness, "have you come to your senses? Or are you still inclined to tear me bridge to ten easy lessons."

"Go away," she muttered. never want to see you again."

"You were entirely wrong," said Haverholt, "and if you're honest you will admit it."

"I don't admit it. No one has ever talked to me like that. I've never been—"

"You've never been so insulting in your life," suggested Haverholt tentatively.

Patricia looked at him quickly.

"Get off your high horse young woman," he ordered her grinning. "You got no more than you deserved, less in fact. If you'd been a man I'd probably have hit you."

"I'd rather you had."

"Very well. Next time I'll try to remember."

"There isn't going to be any next time."

Household Novelties

By Laura Wheeler

IN EVERY home there are household tasks to be done that are not specially entertaining. Mending the family clothes and watching the dinner, while it cooks, can be made more inviting by these novel accessories.

The work bag decorated in outline stitch has a droll decoration that should invite the hesitant needler to her task, while the quaint pincushion with embroidered face invites her to find a safe place for her pins.

The flower pot-holders at hand in the basket container add a gay touch to the kitchen, and can be made of scraps of gay prints. Pattern No. 494 contains the embroidery motif for the bag, the face of the pincushion, and the floral shapes for the pot-holder, as well as complete directions for making the three novelties shown.

FRIEND COLLAPSES AS SHE BARES WIDOW'S DEATH REACTION

M'MAHON LINK WRUNG FROM WITNESS

icing dance steps with the men at the firehouse.

The finding of the gun, which might indicate, as the defense will claim, that he may have harbored thoughts of self-destruction, was told in the testimony of Fire Chief Willis C. Mahoney. But McLoney denied ever saying Capt. Costello was acting peculiar just before his death.

He admitted he was unaware Costello had secreted the gun at the fire house.

Fire marshal, fire buddy, John F. Barrett, defense in cross-examination drew out the fact that Costello had been taking brown tablets, "about the size of a cent," for stomach trouble.

Barrett told also of Jessie, several hours after her husband's death, appearing at the fire house in the company of an insurance man, and of him giving her Costello's insurance policies which he kept there. She did not ask for them, eh admitted under cross-examination. She did not take anything else, he admitted in direct testimony.

Jessie Unmovel by Reference to McMahon

He knew Edward J. McMahon, whose claimed love affair with Jessie is one of state's strongest points. He had been McMahon at the firehouse talking with Costello.

Jessie heard it all with the same lack of emotion.

She was more self-contained than yesterday when, for a brief period, she showed nervousness. She appeared refreshed, well rested, and the famous smile was much in evidence, although the jurors saw but little of it as, leaning over to whisper developments with counsel, she turned her back half to them and concealed her mouth with her hand.

Her closest woman friend, Mrs. Maria Purcell, at first shuddered and wept on the stand as Dist. Atty Cregg pressed for details of a conversation she had with Jessie about Costello's death. Then she collapsed.

At first she denied that the death of Costello had been a subject of discussion between them but later she said there had been a conversation.

Widow Pleads Friend Se Spared Ordeal

"But, I don't remember," she said time and again, biting her lips, as Cregg literally cross-examined his own witness.

She was subjected to an ordeal of questioning for more than 30 minutes while Jessie sat, half smile, shook her head and finally requested her own counsel not to examine her unless it was absolutely necessary.

Assisted from the witness stand by a court officer, she collapsed outside in the arms of her husband, Patrolman John J. Purcell of Peabody, who had preceded her as a state witness.

Jessie came back smiling today through a crowd as large as ever. . . . "It must be a side show," she remarked—but her smile faded when Mrs. Purcell, young, blonde and extremely attractive, took a chair on the witness stand facing her not 20 feet distant.

Mrs. Purcell began weeping almost immediately when questioned about her actions at the Costello home on the day of the alleged murder. She shuddered, drew deep breaths, threw her head back and closed her eyes.

McMahon Came Quickly After Costello's Death

Jessie shook her head and leaned over to her counsel, William G. Clark.

"She can't go on with that," she whispered.

But she did go on with it, telling of the arrival at the Costello home of Edward J. McMahon, erstwhile Peabody police officer, whose love affair with Jessie has been held up as a motive for the crime.

McMahon, she said, put his arm on Jessie's shoulder and asked her if she were all right.

"That's all—that's all I remember!" she wailed.

"It's a shame to do that to her," Jessie told Clark.

There seemed no pretense about Jessie's own emotion. She did not attempt to make it obvious and when Cregg inadvertently called Mrs. Purcell "Mrs. McMahon," she directed a glance of anger at the district attorney.

Gives Jessie's Sleeve a Pat, Then Faints

To all outward appearances, Jessie was more concerned over her friend's plight than her own and when it came time for defense cross-examination Clark said:

"Don't question her unless you have to."

The veteran Clark had one question, however.

"And when you saw Mrs. Costello crying on the day of her husband's death, it was a genuine grief?" he asked.

The chorus of objections from the state counsel could not drown out Mrs. Purcell's affirmative reply.

As Mrs. Purcell walked unsteadily from the courtroom, she smiled at Jessie, brushing her sleeve with trailing, affectionate fingers.

In marked contract to her mental anguish while testifying, was the appearance of her brothers, Thomas and Richard Prendible, who were also at the Costello home on the fatal day.

Thomas Prendible had a broad grin when he denied changing his story regarding the position of Costello's arms as he lay on the floor of his home in death. He grinned when he said he understood the meaning of vivacious, and that that described Jessie, while her husband was a quiet, sober man.

Widow Will Testify, Her Counsel Insists

Rigor mortis, the time of death and the muscular effect of poison were bound up in the examination in some manner not to be explained until the medical experts testify.

When Tom Prendible left the stand he inquired whether that was all for the day. Informed that it was, he gave vent to a fervent "Good!" His brother's testimony was corroborative.

Patrolman Purcell, recalled under cross-examination as the day's first witness, could not be led into saying that he knew Jessie was commenting upon absence of keys when, viewing money, rosary beads and a handkerchief in her husband's pockets shortly after his death, she remarked "Is that all he had?"

The jury sat shirt-sleeved today by permission of Judge Fosdick. It was hot in the courtroom.

Prancis E. Rafter of Jessie's counsel earlier made a vigorous denial of a report that the widow would not take the stand in her own defense.

Coatless Jury Told of Heavy "Undies"

Patrolman Purcell of Peabody was recalled as the first witness today.

When court opened the jury, with the exception of Kern Jones, Lynn salesman, appeared without coats. Judge Fosdick told the attorneys they might make themselves comfortable also if they wished.

"The human mind works with the human body," the judge declared. "If the body is warm, the mind doesn't work so well. You may make yourselves comfortable, gentlemen."

Purcell said he would say the underwear worn by Captain Costello at the time of his death was heavy. Rafter asked several questions about the material and if the witness would say it was medium weight. Purcell said it was heavy.

He admitted he made an exhaustive search of the bathroom but did not look into the medicine cabinet. The glass he inspected was on a shelf, he said, and it was dry and odorless. There was nothing to prevent him opening the cabinet, he admitted, but he didn't.

Q.—Have you any doubt that the glass was dry and odorless? A.—No.

Q.—You're not having any struggle with your mental honesty are you? A.—I should say not.

Purcell admitted under Rafter's driving questions that there was nothing sinister or extraordinary about Costello's death, in his opinion, and that he had received no orders to conduct an investigation.

Q.—Your visit was one of friendship at a time of sorrow. A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you state to Dr. Walsh: "I found a glass in the bathroom. I looked through the bathroom. I looked for a vehicle of some kind. I smelled the glass and it was odorless and dry."

Dist. Atty. Cregg jumped to his feet.

"Prompted Evidence" Hinted by Defense

"Just a moment." He cried. "I object."

"If he did say all these things to the doctor he may say yes," ruled the judge. "If he didn't say all these things he may say no."

A.—I did not.

Q.—You had no conversation with the doctor giving him the information you now give this jury?

Cregg objected again.

"He may answer," said Judge Fosdick.

A.—I can't recall whether I did or not.

Q.—Was the smelling and examination of the glass significant to you? A.—No, sir.

Q.—It was after the police investigation got under way that you attached significance to that glass, wasn't it? A.—Yes.

Q.—Then someone said "That is important, Jack?" A.—I can't recall.

Q.—Substantially that? A.—I don't think so.

Purcell said he gave his information to State Officers Griffin and Murray and Police Chief Pierce of Peabody about a week before the grand jury session. Up to that time he had said nothing to anyone.

Q.—Jessie said to you, "Go up and get my pocketbook and Bill's pants?" A.—Yes.

Q.—You found the pocketbook on the vanity and the pants over the bed post? A.—Yes.

Q.—And in the corner was a woman's nightdress? A.— I wouldn't say it was a nightdress.

Q.—You looked close enough to know whether it was a nightdress? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Would you say it was a woman's garment? A.—I would say it was some part of a woman's apparel.

Q.—It might have been a nightdress? A.—It might have.

Q.—Mrs. Costello removed some rosary beads, a handkerchief and some change from the pants pockets? A.—Yes.

Q.—She said "Where are the keys? Is that all there is?" A.—I think so.

Q.—And when you told the district attorney yesterday that she said "Is that all" you were not trying to say that she was referring to the $5 or whatever it was in the pockets? A.—No, I didn't think that at all.

Q.—You knew she meant was that all there was in the pockets? A.—I don't know what she meant.

Q.—She mentioned keys? A.—I think she did.

Q.—Now, on March 20, you laid down on the floor at the Costello home in the same manner as you did here yesterday and had your picture taken. A.—I don't remember the date, but I did do it.

Rafter ended his cross-examination with that question and Dist. Atty. Cregg called Mrs. Maria Purcell. She is the wife of the policeman and a neighbor and intimate friend of Mrs. Costello.

Woman Friend Collapses Telling Death Scene

Mrs. Purcell visited Mrs. Costello frequently at the jail.

Mrs. Purcell broke down on the stand and was forced to halt her testimony while court officers gave her a drink of water.

Q.—By Craig—Would you put the time of your arrival as between quarter of ten and ten o'clock? A.—Yes.

Q.—Whom did you see when you went in the house? A.—Mrs. Costello and the lady who did the work.

Q.—Did you talk with Mrs. Costello? A.—I asked her where Bill was.

Q.—What was her answer? A.—Upstairs.

Mrs. Purcell testified that her husband came in; that he went directly upstairs and soon came down and told her to get a priest and a doctor. Both her brothers, Thomas and Richard Prendeble, came in, she said. Mrs. Hoffman, a neighbor, also arrived.

Q.—Who came in next? A.—Edward McMahon.

Q.—How long had you been there before McMahon came in? A.—Five or ten minutes.

Q.—Was there any conversation between them? A.—I heard her say "He's dead."

Q.—Is that all you hear between them? A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you know when McMahon left? A.—No.

Q.—Did you go upstairs? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you make any observations as to light? A.—No, but I recall that there was plenty of light.

Q.—Have you told me all the talk you had with Mrs. Costello? A.—I asked her where the blessed candles for the priest were. She told me they were upstairs.

Q.—Did you know where the body was? A.—No I didn't see it.

Q.—Did she tell you he was to be a pall-bearer at the O'Neil funeral? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did she tell you she went up at 10 minutes of 9 and that he was asleep in bed? A.—Yes.

Q.—Your relations with Mrs. Costello were very friendly, more friendly than with Mr. Costello? A.—Yes.

Q.—You have called to see her since her incarceration? A.—Yes.

Q.—Frequently? A.—Yes.

Q.—You have talked things over with her?

Defense Counsel Clark's objection was upheld.

Mrs. Purcell was taken under cross-examination by Atty. Clark.

She said she had been to the Costello home many times during the four years she had known Mrs. Costello.

Q.—During all this trouble you have remained a true and constant friend to Mrs. Costello? A.—Yes.

Q.—She was a loving mother? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you ever see anything in

First Tragic Touches in Jessie's Face :-: As Patrolman and Friend Testify

WIDOW SHOWS EMOTION FOR A MOMENT

Just a few tears came to the eyes of Mrs. Jessie Burnett Costello, as within a few feet of where she sat in the Salem court Patrolman John J. Purcell re-enacted death scene in the Costello home. Purcell was a neighbor to the Costellos. Purcell was lying on the floor in front of the jury box in his re-enactment, when the widow shed tears as caught by Artist Raymond E. Shanahan.

ARTIST SHANAHAN PEEPS IN AT MURDER TRIAL

Asst. Dist.-Atty. Green gets close to Mrs. Costello as he questions a witness of the prosecution. This was while John "Tip" O'Neil revealed on stand that Mrs. Costello had told him of having trouble with "Bill"—meaning her husband. But O'Neil simply would not give dates of conversation. Other interesting witnesses were Katherine Simbolist, one-day-week maid at the Costello home, and Charles F. Burns.

McMahon's Hug Only One

Salem, July 20—An arm of her counsel, Francis E. Rafter, encircled the shoulder of Mrs. Jessie B. Costello in court today as Rafter cross-examined Richard Prendible as to the manner in which Edward J. McMahon, former Peabody special policeman, had his arm on her shoulder on the morning her husband was found dead.

"Is this the way McMahon did it?" Atty. Rafter asked the witness, and Prendible replied that it was "something like that."

"It was just a gesture of sympathy, wasn't it, the same as anyone might do?" Rafter asked.

Costello 'Peculiar,' Not Eccentric

Salem Courthouse, July 20—"Bill" Costello, characterized by Chief William F. Mahoney as a man who did "little talking and little laughing and one who took a very serious outlook on life," was not eccentric.

Defense counsel, pressing for this information, were unsuccessful in drawing a description of "eccentricity" for the fire captain from the man whose supervision he worked under.

Chief Mahoney admitted "Bill" was peculiar" but not to a point of being eccentric.

There was nothing strange or peculiar about "Bill" Costello's conduct, witness insisted to Atty. William Clark.

Costello in Prayer Twice Each Day

Salem Courthouse, July 20—"Bill" Costello prayed twice a day, after lunch and after dinner, a brother fireman, John Barrett, testified today.

The fire captain, under whom he served, went into seclusion and on bended knee with the rosary beads in his hands, solemnly prayed, witness said.

This was regarded by other firemen, Barrett said, as the indication of a "fine-souled" man.

Eleven of Jurors in Shirtsleeves

Permission Granted to Doff Coats for Comfort

By RUTH MUGGLEBEE
Boston American Staff Correspondent

Salem, July 20—Social etiquette gave way to comfort when the trial of Jessie Costello, in its fourth day, opened this morning.

Eleven of the 12 men, all married but one, the "smiling widow's" peers and deciding fate, marched to their seats in the jury box looking as cool as the proverbial cucumber.

WIDOW DOFFS JACKET

Their coats were discarded at the suggestion of Judge Frederick Fosdick, who recognized the need for comfort during July days. Prosecution and defense counsel were granted the same privilege. The judge however, took no such advantage for himself.

First to take notice of the judge's concession was William O'Brien, junior counsel for Mrs. Costello.

The day was started off philosophically by Judge Fosdick, who in deliberate, carefully worded phrases, announced:

"As I said to the jury, the human mind functions better and more properly when the human body is comfortable. Counsel may make themselves comfortable if they so wish."

Jessie, however, had beaten the court to it. Upon her arrival this morning, still the cynosure of public gaze, she had left off the swagger jacket which covered her sheer crepe dress the past two days.

The cool-looking frock was short sleeved, round necked, and from the front dropped a three-tiered lace jabot.

MATRON IN BROWN

Jessie's jail matron, Mrs. Rachel Craig, however, is likewise proving herself of interest in fashions. Mrs. Craig has worn three different costumes in four days. Today she was garbed in a brown crepe dress with a brown straw hat.

The jurymen, small and tall, lean and fat, brought a dazzling array of color to their section of the courtroom, with a generous sprinkling of blue and light tan shirts staring Jessie in the face.

And though there isn't a Beau Brummell among them, they sure go in for color. And now they're going in for comfort.

the home that would indicate anything but love for Bill? A—No.

Q—When you went to the house Jessie was crying? A—No.

Q—After you got there she started to cry? A—Yes.

Mrs. Purcell left the stand smiling. She was in a state of collapse in the women's witness room and was revived by her husband and women witnesses waiting to be called.

Thomas Prendible of 11 Fay ave., Mrs. Purcell's brother, was the next witness. He testified he was in the house the day Costello died and that he went upstairs and saw the body lying in the hallway.

Q. (By Cregg)—Describe the position of the body. A.—It was lying in the hallway on its back; the two hands were bent at the elbow and lying on the chest; it was clad in a union suit and black stockings.

Q.—Did you feel the body? A.—Yes, it was cold.

Q.—What part of the body did you feel? A.—The wrist.

Q.—What did you do next? A.—I helped to lift the body and put it into the bed.

Prendible said his two sisters, Agnes and Mrs. Purcell, Mrs. Hoffman, Dr. Walsh and John Purcell were at the house at the time. He heard no conversation between Mrs. Costello and McMahon, he said.

Cregg inquired about the position of Costello's arms when Prendible saw the body. Both arms were bent at the elbows and pointed toward the body, the witness said.

Q.—Do you remember going over this with me? A.—Yes, sir.

Holds Firm on Arms, Denies Changing Story

Q.—Do you remember saying at that time that the left arm was parallel with the body and that the right arm was bent over the abdomen? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Do you remember going over this with me about a month ago? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Then would you say you went over it? A.—At the grand jury hearing. That is all.

Q.—Remember talking to me in my office? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Remember what you said about the position of the arms? A.—Yes, sir. The same as I say now.

Friend Near Faint in Widow Trial

Salem Courthouse, July 20—Mrs. Marie Purcell, government witness against Jessie Costello, but also a friend and neighbor of the accused, was overcome by emotion while testifying today. She had often visited Mrs. Costello in jail.

She appeared about to faint and a court officer hurried forward with a glass of water. There was a brief delay, after which she continued her story about events on the morning Capt. Costello was found dead.

Mrs. Purcell is the wife of the policeman who lay on the courtroom floor to show the position of Costello's body.

Q.—Have you talked to anyone since then? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Do you know Mr. O'Brine (pointing to the defense attorney)? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Talk to him about the case? A.—No, sir.

Prendible was cross-examined by Atty. Rafter.

Q.—Have you never talked to O'Brine? Yes, I have talked to him.

Q.—I mean about this case? No, sir. I refused to talk to him about it.

Q.—You never talked to Mr. Clark about it? A.—I don't know Mr. Clark.

Q.—And you never talked it over with me or with Mrs. Costello? A.—No, sir.

Prendible said he had known Mr. and Mrs. Costello for a number of years and that he always felt friendly toward Mrs. Costello even down to the present moment.

Q.—You walked into their home s good many times. You saw the devotion between Bill and Jessie and you know it was a fine devotion? A.—I didn't walk into their home a good many times.

Q.—Well, you know that Bill and Jessie got along fine? A.—Yes, sir.

He testified that he had seen Mrs. Costello with her three children many times and that he knew the children well. He said he is connected with the fire department and last Christmas was at the station where Costello was in charge.

Q.—You felt the body of Capt. Costello? A.—Yes, sir.

Atty. Rafter asked the witness to show him how he felt the body and Prendible placed his hand over Rafter's left wrist.

Q.—You say it was cold? It was more an absence of warmth, wasn't it? A.—Yes, sir.

McMahon and Widow Were Both in Tears

Dist.-Atty. Cregg jumped to his feet as Rafter finished.

"And by that you mean it was cold," he queried.

"Yes," said the witness.

Rafter laughed as the prosecutor resumed his seat. Mrs. Costello flashed a smile at Prendible when he passed her after leaving the stand.

The next witness was Richard Prendible, brother of the previous witness. He said he went to the Costello home on the morning of February 17 shortly after his sister, Agnes, arriving about 10 o'clock.

He talked with Mrs. Costello, he said, and asked her if he could do anything. Her remaining a few minutes. He left, and did some errands, later returning.

Edward J. McMahon was there when he returned Prendible said, and he heard him ask Mrs. Costello if she were all right.

McMahon then placed his arm around the widow's shoulder, the witness said.

McManus and Mrs. Costello were both crying, he said.

Under cross-examination by Atty. Rafter, Prendible said that as far as he could see, Mrs. Costello was devoted to her children and to her husband.

Rafter then placed his left arm around the shoulder of Mrs. Costello and asked witness if that was how McMahon did it. Prendible said it was something like that. Mrs. Costello remained motionless.

"It was just a gesture of sympathy, wasn't it?" Rafter asked. "The same as anyone might do?"

"Well, I didn't see anyone else do it," the witness answered, "I didn't do it."

The morning recess was called at this point.

Fire Chief Mahoney of Peabody was the next witness. He testified he had known Costello since boyhood. Costello, he said, was made captain of the fire department in 1926 and placed in charge of the Endicott station.

Asst.-Dist.-Atty. Green gave Cregg a breathing spell and took over the examination of Mahoney.

Q.—Is it necessary to clean the brass and other metals in the fire stations? A.—Yes.

Never Used Cyanide; Found Costello's Gun

Q.—How long have they been using it? A.—Three years.

Q.—Did you ever use cyanide of potassium and oxalic acid for polishing in the fire department? A.—No.

Chief Mahoney said he had seen Costello two or three times a week during the last three years but never noticed any physical or mental change in the man.

Q.—Did Capt. Costello ever lose any time from his duties since 1929? A.—No.

Chief Mahoney learned of Costello's death from firemen at Endicott station.

"I went to the Costello home and talked with Mrs. Costello about funeral arrangements and offered her any help I could give," he said. "She asked me to confer with the undertaker about the funeral and assured me that any arrangements I made about the fire department's tribute would be all right.

"Later in the afternoon, I cleaned out Capt. Costello's desk at the station. I found some insurance policies on his children, fire records, a revolver and five cartridges."

Q.—Did you see Mr. O'Brine of defense counsel a couple of nights after the funeral, A.—Yes.

Green asked defense counsel to step to the bench for a conference on the admissibility of his next question. At the conclusion of the conference, Green turned the witness over to the defense without putting the question.

Chief Defense Counsel Clark conducted the cross-examination of Chief Mahoney. The fire department head admitted Costello had a very serious outlook on life. The captain was devoted to his family, he said, but he could not say as to the devotion of Mrs. Costello as he had been to their home but once, several years ago.

The chief said he saw Costello on an average of three times a week and did not observe anything strange or peculiar about his actions. He did recall talking with Dr. Murphy and Andrew Fyfe and remarking that Bill was "a peculiar fellow."

Hadn't Known Costello Kept a Revolver

Costello was never injured while on duty as far as the chief could recall, but was on a fire truck which skidded and struck a tree in 1927.

Q.—Do you remember the trap rock fire? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Do you remember if Captain Costello was injured going to, coming from or at the fire? A.—I don't recall.

Well, in 1927—

Asst. Dist.-Atty. Green objected because of the elapse of time.

"I do not think it is too remote," said the judge.

Q.—In 1927, Chief, was Costello injured? A.—I will say this: That Captain Costello remained on duty.

Shown a newspaper clipping, the chief said it did not refresh his memory as far as injuries to Costello were concerned.

Clark offered the insurance policies found in Costello's desk as exhibits.

Chief Mahoney said he had not known Costello had a revolver in his desk until he found it after the death. He did not know how long it had been there.

Q.—Is it the duty of a fireman to know something of first aid treatments? A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you know if Capt. Costello was applying himself to the study of poisons as part of the first aid work? A.—I did not.

Q.—Did you assign him to teach first aid to the other men? A.—Yes, first aid and use of the inhalator.

He Had to Learn Poison Treatment

Q.—When was that? A.—About a week before he died.

Q.—Did this first aid work include treatment for poison among the other things? A.—Yes, sir, that was included.

Q.—This work would require study, wouldn't it? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you furnish the captain with a book to study? A.—Yes, I gave him a book.

Q.—Did you know if part of that book is devoted to poison? A.—I did not look at it.

Q.—Do you know if there is a part there which has to do with cyanide of potassium?

"Just a moment," cried Green. "He said he didn't look at the book."

"I'll withdraw the question," Clark said.

Chief Mahoney was then asked by Clark to look over two pages in the book and to read what was there. After reading a minute the chief said he had glanced through the book at some time or other but had not studied it.

Q.—By Clark—Is there something about cyanide there? Green was on his feet again.

"I suppose the book will tell that," he said.

Clark offered the book as an exhibit and it was marked.

Clark then produced a pamphlet and asked the chief if he had seen it among the articles taken from Costello's drawer. The witness said he had not.

Widow Visited Fire House on Death Day

Clark asked the chief if Captain Costello had received a pamphlet from the department of safety, and the witness said he didn't know. Clark offered the pamphlet as an exhibit. Green objected and the court excluded it.

"As there are objections, I will have to exclude it for the present," the judge ruled, "but we will have it marked for identification."

John Barrett, Peabody fireman in Capt. Costello's station for six years, followed his chief.

Q.—Did you see any change in Costello's conditions from the time he went to the station as captain until the day he died? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Did you see him taking anything? A.—I saw him taking some tablets. I asked him if he had a cold. He said they were for his stomach. They were about the size of a cent and were brown.

Barrett said that when the Costello children visited their father at the fire station he hugged them and played fireman with his three-year-old son Bobby.

Brass and nickel at the fire station were cleaned with a patented polish during the time he was there. He never remembered using a composition of cyanide and oxalic acid for this purpose.

Q.—How did you learn of Capt. Costello's death? A.—Deputy Chief Hannon telephoned me.

Q.—Did you receive any other calls? A.—Yes, that morning from the Costello home about 11:15.

Q.—Who called? A.—I thought it was Mrs. Costello.

Q.—Was there some talk about Mrs. Costello coming to the firehouse? A.—Yes. She came to the station about 4 or 5 o'clock that afternoon.

Q.—Who was with her? A.—Edward Obrine, brother of the defense counsel.

Q.—What did she say? A.—She told me she had some keys they thought would fit the captain's desk.

Q.—Did she open the desk? A.—She came downstairs and said the keys did not fit.

Q.—Was there any other talk? A.—Yes, I told her that the captain's insurance policies were in his locker.

Costello Danced and Was Merry at Station

Q—Did she say anything to that? A.—She said "I think I'll take them with me."

Barrett said he took the insurance policies to Mrs. Costello and she turned them over to Denny Boardman, an insurance agent, who came into the fire station shortly after Mrs. Costello arrived.

Q.—When did you see Capt. Costello last? A.—I worked with him three nights before he died.

Q.—Did you notice any change in his appearance? A.—He looked the same as he always did.

Q.—How was that? A.—He was talking, playing the radio and dancing around.

Q.—Was there some talk in the fire station about the firemen's ball which was to be held in April? A.—Yes, about a month before he died.

Q.—What was that talk?

McMahon Visited Costello at Fire Station

A.—He said he liked to dance but didn't know any steps. He said he did not want to be a wall flower because his wife was not going to the ball.

Q.—Did you do anything about that? A.—I told him I would show him a few steps. We waltzed around the room a couple of times. Mr. Trainor danced with him after I got through.

Q.—Did you have music? A.—Yes, the radio in the rack room.

Q.—Did you know Edward McMahon? A.—Yes. He was a call fireman in our company. Q.—Did you see him at the station? A.—He came in once and a while to talk with the captain.

Q.—Did you know anything about Capt. Costello during your association with him in the fire department n reference to his religious duties? A.—He prayed a lot. He always went upstairs after dinner and prayed for an hour. After supper he would go upstairs again and pray for a while.

Defense Counsel Rafter took Barrett under cross-examination.

Q.—Six weeks before his death you saw him take the brown stomach pills? A.—Yes.

Q.—He wasn't a member of the tug of war team? A.—No. They were heartier men than Bill Costello.

Q.—Did you say to Andrew Mc, the defendent's father, "I don't think Bill Costello is right, he prays too much"? A.—No.

Q.—Did you make statement which would indicate that he prayed too freely? A.—I think I did, after the death of the Costello baby.

Q.—There was a change after William, Jr., died three years ago? A.—There was for a while.

Q.—He constantly talked in reverential tone about the tragedy of losing little Bill? A.—Only once or twice to me.

Grief-Crushed After Death of His Baby

Q.—There was an increase after the baby's death in Bill's religious fervor? A.—I thought he was always religious.

EYES SPEAK IN THIS SMILE

Even Married Man Can't Tell All

Salem Courthouse, July 20—Spectators, and judge and jury, too, at the Costello murder trial, were left wondering if it was a nightgown that Patrolman John Purcell found in the Costello bedroom.

"And in the corner was a woman's nightdress?" asked Defense Atty. Francis E. Rafter in a matter-of-fact tone.

Purcell surprised with this: "I wouldn't say it was a nightdress."

And the most he would admit was that it was "some part of a woman's apparel." One spectator in a stage whisper wanted to know if the witness was married. The answer came shortly afterward when Mrs. Purcell was called to the stand.

The United States Government has sounded the call, by giving a direct grant to the States, of at least four hundred million dollars for highway improvement. This is part of a vast program of public works to spread national employment and to stimulate business.

This work will be done through your own State Highway Department. The Federal Government asks no return except that the money be expended wisely—that the improvements be permanent, substantially built and of a type that gives men work.

CONCRETE ROADS meet every specification. They are permanent. Maintenance cost is much less than that of any other type. They give you the greatest driving safety, convenience and comfort. They cost less to drive over—saving you gas, tires, repairs and depreciation. They will give work to men now on doles in your community. Money will flow across the counters of home stores.

Insist on CONCRETE for your roads—get the most and the best road for the money—and the maximum employment for labor!

Remember the roads of 1910? Narrow strips of dirt—ankle-deep dust—quagmires of mud—The cost of moving goods was terrific!

The engineers have built, with cement, a network of CONCRETE highways throughout the nation that is nearly one hundred thousand miles in length. Cement spanned great rivers and broad valleys with concrete. Cement made the modern motor vehicle practical; made motoring a part of our daily life.

given to the culture of the Jewish people.

"As regards their religion, that, like any other, is opium for the people' and must go. To aid in the creation of a purely atheistic state, the teaching of Hebrew in at present prohibited; but, as the crisis passes, the restriction will most likely be relaxed.

"Everything has been done under the Communist dictatorship to give the Jew a square deal. They have even gone so far as to take away from the individual peasants to create Jewish collective farms, which continue to survive only because of the protection they receive from the present government."

Mr. Abrons finds that the old anti-Semitic feeling, "that curse of the czars," still rankles in the stubborn bosoms of the old peasants, and "it seems that the Communist government is the only force between Jews and pogroms." That is a high and powerful fence.

Mr. Abrons writes further:

"The younger generation—brought up under an enlightened government—knows not the difference in religion, and cares little for the difference in race. Inter-marriage is very common and is in fact increasing, and the Yiddish language and Jewish culture are slowly dying.

The young generation of Jews is doing everything it can to aid in assimilation—or, rather, to smooth out the differences between them and their compatriots. This is partly in the spirit of Communism, but mostly, I think, because they are not particularly proud of their Jewishness."

In Odessa, I asked a Jewish young Communist what was the percentage of Jews in the Komsomols. He appeared rather insulted and answered that there were no longer any distinctions —no Jews, no Gentiles. He evidently wasn't too happy to be reminded of his origin.

"It appears, then, that it is by special effort of the younger generation of Jews that Judaism —its language and its culture— is dying. In time, so it seems, there will no longer be any need for Yiddish courts and schools and 'houses of culture,' for the Jewish culture will have become absorbed into the Russian —or will have disappeared entirely—thus advancing one more step in the creation of a classless society."

This picture of Russia, written by Mr. Abrons, an intelligent young American, will encourage those who believe that civilization will begin with the ending of racial antagonisms and differences.

CECILY DANIELS LIVERMORE BRIDE ON NORTH SHORE

HENRY LODGE, JR. EMILY RICE GEORGE PATTON

IT'S PONY LESSON TIME on the North Shore. Henry Lodge, Jr., son of Henry Cabot Lodge of Hamilton, is being instructed by Miss Emily Rice and George Patton, and his pony's name is Beauty. Miss Rice, daughter of Mrs. Neil Rice of Hamilton, is one of the most popular society girls on the North Shore. Young Patton is the son of Maj. and Mrs. George Patton of Hamilton and Washington. (Boston American photo.)

Gown of Ivory Trimmed With Tiny Pearls

In the quaint little stone Christ Church in Hamilton at 4 o'clock this afternoon, Miss Cecily Livermore becomes the bride of Mr. Willis Paine Beal, son of Mrs. Lillian Darrow Beal of Beacon Hill and Nahant. The ceremony and the reception which follows at Boxfields, the Topsfield home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Livermore, are extremely simple and informal, with only relatives and a few intimate friends attending, the marriage service being read by Dr. William G. Thayer and the Rev. W. F. A. Stride, rector of the church.

The bride is carrying white orchids with her gown of ivory satin trimmed with tiny pearls. Her veil of rose point lace falls softly over the small satin train of the dress.

Sister Attends

Miss Gwendolyn Livermore, one of the season's debutantes, is her sister's only attendant. Her dress of organza in soft tones shading from pale pink to deep apricot contrasts with her colorful bouquet of blue larkspur and pink African daisies. Her small hat is the same material as her dress.

Mr. E. Maurean Beal is serving as best man and Mr. Robert Livermore, Jr., Mr. Howland Beals, Mr. Edward Nash, Jr., and Mr. Robert Hallowell, Jr., assist with the informal ushering.

Mrs. Livermore selected for the wedding a gown of aquamarine chiffon and a large black hat. The fashionable new satin with a printed design of pastel flowers fashions Mrs. Beal's dress, with which she is wearing a black hat.

Miss Livermore, who is well known for her sketches and cartoons in local magazines, has exhibited her sketches at the Junior League, of which she is a member. She is also a Vincent Club member. After graduating from Beaver Country Day School in 1929, she studied art both here and abroad.

Feted at Dinners

Mr. Beal attended Harvard and his clubs are the Tennis and Racquet, Fly, Somerset and Country Club. He and his bride plan to make their home in Boston.

Among the many parties which have preceded the marriage of this popular young couple was a dinner party given by Miss Rosamond Blanchard of Nahant last Saturday before the dance at the Nahant Club. Mrs. Katherine Schuyler Choate entertained in honor of the bridal couple last evening at her home, White Commons, in Topsfield.

Latest Notes of Fashionables

By Dorothy Whipple Fry

MRS. HAMILTON THAYER, summering at Plymouth, appeared the other day in a soft peach colored silk with a China blue and white print coat. Her small daughter, Harriet, who accompanied her, wore a dainty frock of white with blue trimmings. She is a sunny blonde, petite and dainty.

Two of the most attractive young women of today's young set are the Means sisters, the Misses Alice and Susan, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Means, with their red golden hair, glamorous smiles and gay laughing eyes. Miss Alice, whose engagement to Mr. Harold P. Mills, Jr., has lately been announced, appears in a crepe print, one of the newest varieties of that soft, clinging, exquisite texture, the shades being rose and mauve, blending into a lovely shade of blue with blue sash and matching picture hat of blue. Susan, who is to make her debut this season, wore a frock belted about her slender waist and with the modish cape effect and touches of cerise.

Mrs. Gilbert Stewart, another smart matron of the North Shore, has a tricky costume of brown knit wool and brown and white swagger scarf. Especially nice is a gorgeous new evening gown of soft flesh pink with silver sequins, lovely with her brown hair and dark coloring.

Miss Janet Pierce, a pupil of Miss May's school, is sailing at Marblehead. Her blonde hair bright gold in the sunshine and nifty pair of white slacks and white sailor blouse, a smart sweater of blue and white stripes.

Hundreds Attend Bridge to Aid St. Vincent's Orphan Guild

AGAINST A BACKGROUND OF GRAY-GREEN SEA and a cloudless blue sky, Pemberton Inn, at Hull, was a perfect setting yesterday for the mid-summer subscription matinee bridge party given by the St. Vincent's Orphan Guild, which is so nobly carrying on the work of raising money for the children of St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum.

The interior of the inn simply radiated a welcome; the pretty, smiling faces of the committee being set off by the many colored and modish gowns. Tables were arranged along one entire side of the room, overlooking the water, and two long, beautifully decorated tables were at the back, laden with over one hundred and fifty bridge prizes, of all description. About four hundred guests were present.

Mrs. M. Fannon

Mrs. Martin H. Fannon, guild president and executive chairman, received the guests, in a becoming costume of brown and white chiffon, with matching hat; Mrs. James E. O'Connell, in charge of the subscriptions, was attired in a gown of yellow crepe, cut on tailored lines, and Mrs. James McDevitt, was attractively cool in white.

Weaving her way about the tables, directing the playing, was Mrs. Louis G. Cote in blue flowered chiffon, assisted by Miss Alice Miller, Miss Elizabeth Watson and Miss Ann King. Among those playing were Mrs. Joseph F. O'Connell, modishly gowned in a sport costume of brown and white; Mrs. Frank Taintor, Mrs. Fred Mansfield in a smart sport ensemble, Mrs. James Wood, Mrs. Moore and Mrs. Joseph Eichorn. Serving on the committee were Mrs. Frank Spang, Stephen, Courtenay, Edward Walsh, O. H. Bryant, Fred Wayne, Henry Quinn, Millard Merritt and Agnes Miano.

MOTORING OVER TO THAT ultra smart section of the Cape we saw Mrs. Edward C. Moore on the tenth green of the Oyster Harbors Club golf course practicing her shots wearing a chic creation. Her husband has been secretary to three mayors, Fitzgerald, Peters and at the beginning of the Curley regime. He has recently made a connection with a large New York brokerage house. The Moores are summering at Hyannisport.

BOOKS---And a Number of Things

By Charles Hanson Towne

There is something rather pathetic and paradoxically, something rather funny, in what might be called the "songs of longing" that pour out over the air these days and nights. One tunes in at any hour and can scarcely miss the tragic voice of some wailing singer crazy to go back, back, back to the land of cotton, or one who craves just one more glimpse of that dear old Georgia moon that shines above the pines.

Now, I don't know why a Georgia moon should be different from a Minnesota or a California moon; but it seems it has a beauty all its own, though it must be the same moon I am looking at in Connecticut this summer. If it takes on another aspect when it shines over Georgia I am wondering what the reason is for the transformation. It is warmer, no doubt, down there; but the moon remains cool, doesn't it, no matter over what part of the earth it pours down its silvery light?

Other singers, strangely homesick, cry out for sweet ole Caroline —never Carolina; just as it is never Virginia that they seek, but always Virginie. The brief dropping in dialect gives the wish a pathos, I suppose, that it would otherwise lack.

Mother songs rend the air. The dear old parent who has been left behind suddenly takes on an importance, a lovableness, that was never appreciated until the singer got to a New York studio. Absence increases the affection, of course—makes the heart grow fonder, as some philosopher once said. An absent mother is particularly dear to all those radio singers, and as for an absent lover—the other vibrates at the mere thought of him.

Fond memories are often spoken of. Recollections of childhood—invariably linked and rhymed with wildwood—bring ready tears; and I should hate to count the number of ballads that contain the hrase "when evening shadows fall." The singer becomes doubly wistful at twilight, and the announcers' voices almost break at this hour if they speak of it. The tragic thing is that often the "when shadows fall songs" are rendered, through some stupidity or misunderstanding on the part of the program makers, at 10 a. m. They lose there by a certain reality and appropriateness, sandwiched in between a dry lecture on the gold standard and a racy talk on how to make good huckleberry pies. The poor soprano who is put on early in the morning may not be in her best voice, and one should not judge her too harshly, working against such difficult odds.

It is hard to feel the spirit of longing when the sun has only lately risen, and it is more than difficult to convince listeners-in of the genuineness of one's emotions at so early an hour.

The "sing hymns" are usually carefully scheduled for the sympathetic hour of sunset. We can feel their old-fashioned spirit better then. But the "longing" singers are not always so fortunate in being thus appropriately put on the air. They do their valiant best; they croon melodiously; they work hard to create an illusion of suffering, whether it be right after the morning meal or deep in the heart of the night. But it must be a strain to assume an anguished mood, to cry out for that "little old mountain home in Tennessee" when the singer knows that half her invisible audience is washing breakfast dishes. "Memory Lane" is hard to visualize at such an hour. All expressions of homesickness should be uttered when the lights are dim and low. It is cruel to singer and audience alike to have it otherwise.

But the point is that most of these troubadours wouldn't go back to Georgia or Old Virginia if you gave them car or bus fare, and even paid off the mortgage on the old, falling-to-pieces home. They prefer the glittering artificial lights of Broadway, and would be resentful if you tore them away from wriggling signs and chain restaurants. They would be bored to death with honeysuckle and wild flowers, and they would far rather consume 3.2 beer than the clear-crystal water drawn from an old oaken bucket.

Those who wrote the songs are equally chained to cobblestones and skyscrapers, and most of them have never seen a moon coming over the mountain, though on occasions they have witnessed its pathetic rise above the dark granite of huge cities.

Back in the hills they seem to have loved as well our minnesingers would ache for the privilege of standing before a microphone, no matter how hot the night, and rendering their songs of longing till the end of time.

'Dieteers' Are Enthusiastic; No "On-a-Diet" Feeling, They Say

'Keeping Fit' Diet Begins Its Second Day With Many Happy Followers. Are You One?

Copyright, 1933, for the Boston Evening American

THE SECOND DAY of the Keeping Fit Diet, which originated in the spotless diet kitchens of Boston's own City Hospital, is upon us, and if you haven't already started it, jump right into the swim and share in its lavish possibilities for better health, normal weight, contentment and happiness.

You don't have to be hungry at any time when you are on the Keeping Fit Diet. If you faithfully follow it, the first week you will lose in the neighborhood of three pounds. After that, each week will see a normal, unhurried loss of one pound. Specialists tell us that to lose much more than one pound a week is not advisable.

And there is so much more that is important and different about the Keeping Fit Diet. It keeps your resistance up to scratch all the time, helps you fight colds better. No matter how energetic a person may be the diet will provide all the necessary energy-building elements.

Perfect balance of minerals, proteins, vitamins and roughage is provided for the average healthy person. In other words, everyone is a fit subject for the Keeping Fit Diet, unless ill, or unless the body's supply of any one of the elements mentioned above is deficient. In either such case, the family doctor might be consulted.

Faithful budgeteers will find the Keeping Fit Diet a joy. It calls for no greater expense than the average home menu for a healthy family. In fact, it can well help in establishing a new and economical budget.

Don't forget—the day you start, choose a scale, weigh yourself and make a note of your weight. Thereafter, on the same scale, the same day, the same time, weigh yourself again and keep the written record.

Wedding in a Greek Church

By Margaret Matson

THE "SCHOOL OF CLOTHES" receives many interesting requests. One reads as follows:

"Dear Miss Matson—I am planning to attend an evening wedding at a Greek Orthodox Church. The wedding takes place on a Sunday evening and a reception follows. Would you please help me choose a dress appropriate to wear for the occasion?

Not being of the Greek Orthodox faith, I know nothing about their customs. I have an evening gown, the back of which is not very low. Would this be suitable? I can wear a short silk cape over it. I should not like to appear over-dressed.

"Very sincerely yours,
"MISS M.G.,
"Amesbury, Mass."

We didn't know the answer to that one ourselves, so we called the Greek consulate and told our story. There are no clothes restrictions in the Greek Orthodox Church. One may wear whatever she deems suitable.

Therefore, for a Sunday evening wedding we suggest something long, but not too formal. The evening gown with the somewhat high back and the silk cape should be very good.

You would not be overdressed, Miss M. G. However, much depends upon the other guests that are to be present.

The Marry-Go-Round; Love Racket

By HELEN ROWLAND

THE GREATEST comfort and privilege which the modern woman enjoys is her freedom from the "observation ward."

Helen Rowland

Up to a decade or so ago, a girl was almost constantly in the position of a prisoner on parole, trying to make a good record by living up to some man's "ideals" . . . Or to meet the popular masculine notion of feminine charm.

When men disapproved of "painted women," all nice girls went about with sallow cheeks and shiny noses their whole lives long. And often died spinsters, just for the lack of a dime's worth of carmine! And if men vowed they liked them feminine and sweet, they choked back their opinions, smoked their cigarettes on the sly, and blew the smoke out of the window.

Every girl's life was a continuous vaudeville show, in which she put on a different act every few months in the attempt to be the "ideal woman" for one man after another. She could have given Elsie Janis lots of points for her "impersonations"! She could play every role from Little Eva to "Hot Mama" or "Highbrow Isabel"!

Then marriage WAS a racket! And the average woman was such a whited sepulcher that NO man knew what he was getting until he got it home, and the cellophane came off. A girl was wrapped up in as many artifices and poses as she was in petticoats, and her real thoughts heart and disposition were as much of a mystery to her lover as was her real figure.

* * *

But the modern girl has come to the conclusion that if a man doesn't admire her or love her just as God made her, then they just "don't click"—and he's not the man for HER. And that if she has to wear a perpetual smile and a vacuous look in order to win him, she'll never be able to hold him once he discovers that she has several working brain cells and a healthy Irish temper.

Amy and Jean Begin 'Eat and Be Fit' Diet

By "KEEP FIT" EDITOR

"YOU'VE GOT to convince me that I'm on a diet, Jean. I've eaten through yesterday's schedule, and there must be something wrong. It seems impossible that I could make any dent in these 20 pounds of excess weight and not starve a LITTLE bit."

This was from Amy Meserve, 8 Lancaster st., Cambridge, who with her roommate Jean Edgemore, has consented to keep the Boston Evening American informed on their progress in the diet. Jean is overweight only twelve pounds, and her object is to keep in the best possible condition for a summer of strenuous work and play, as well as pare off a few of her extra pounds.

"That is the nice part of the Keeping Fit Diet," we heard Jean counter Amy's remark that "You can hardly realize that you are cutting down on fattening foods, because it is so balanced that all the body's needs are supplied. By the way, what makes you think you're eating more than you ordinarily do?"

"Well, take lunch for instance. Monday, before I started the Keeping Fit Diet I had only a piece of blueberry pie and a pint of milk for lunch. And Tuesday for lunch I had bouillon, ham salad, milk, blackberries! That WAS a lunch!"

"Think again — besides your regular dinner—didn't you also have a midnight snack, as you call it, Monday night?" Jean was trying to convince doubting Amy.

"Yes, I did have a fourth meal, at that, Jean. You know how I love to eat late at night."

"And was it more than crackers and milk?" Amy questioned her with a secret, wise look.

"Well,—er, yes. It was a bit more than that." The idea seemed to be dawning on Amy that perhaps she had underestimated the amount of food she had eaten the day before going on the diet.

"Go on, Amy, just what was it?" Jean urged.

"Well—I fried some tenderloin in gobs of butter. And, of course, I had some French fried potatoes. What good would steak be without potatoes?"

"Don't stall, Amy, what else?"

"You would drag the cruel truth out of me, Jean. All right, I'm convinced. I can see that the skimpy luncheon of blueberry pie and milk was more than made up for that night with steak and potatoes—"

"—And maybe a little asparagus, and maybe a couple glasses of milk?" Jean was relentless.

"Yes, all of those. I may as well come clean, I suppose. Guess I'll stay right on the Keeping Fit Diet, at that."

Hiking Outfit and Clothes for Fishing

Does a cool mountain lake call you? Do you yearn for the relaxation that comes with lazy days, fishing? Does a dude ranch promise you the kind of fun you want? Do you long to swap your present city background for the grandeur of a rocky mountain scene?

Unless your vacation plans include lolling on silvery sands, you'll want to hear a thing or two about the type of costume to take with you for fishing, hiking and camping. The set-up is a rather professional sounding one, but the consoling fact is that females look so completely charming when outfitted in these sturdy, mannish clothes!

The typical costume is almost regulation. The fabrics vary and the appearance may be changed with different shirts, but otherwise all fishing and camping clothes look pretty much alike. Coats are always cut loosely, shirts have large roomy armholes that never bind, and slightly fitted breeches. There are several types of boots—hip-length waders for deep-stream, moccasin boots for those who cast their lines from the shore, and heavy-laced "hikers" for climbing over rocks.

This is a classicly perfect outfit: Necessity is ever the mother of invention, so to begin with, the cotton sailcloth of the coat and breeches is waterproofed, and in order to store away a few handy fishing tackles, the pockets are made like roomy bags. The shirt, worn open at the throat, sportsman's fashion, is of finely checked Tattersall flannel. (Emulating man again!)

Boy Is Slow to Take Her Out

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am seventeen and have been going with a boy of twenty-three for the past year. He tells me that he loves me very much but the trouble is he expects me to sit home night after night when he comes to see me.

PAT

Dear Pat. Who wouldn't get bored sitting home hot summer evenings? As the young man has a good profession, it can't be poverty that's making him so housebound, unless he's inclined to be a bit close. Perhaps he doesn't realize how staying at home bores you, and you might try him with: "It's a beautiful evening; wouldn't you like to go somewhere?"

Pneumonia May Appear in Summer

By DR. R. S. COPELAND

PNEUMONIA is a disease which may occur during the summer, as well as the winter months. This disease is often referred to as "captain of the men of death." It respects neither age nor sex nor season of the year.

Dr. Copeland

Pneumonia used to be called "inflammation of the lungs" and usually follows a minor cold or some infection of the nose, throat or ears. It is most common during cold days and in changeable weather.

It is a good plan never to allow your body to become chilled. If you are harboring the germs of pneumonia, or are exposed to these germs, you are liable when chilled to contract the disease. This warning should be observed particularly by children and elderly persons, who are extremely susceptible to this dreaded disease.

Chilling of the body lowers the resistance of the body against disease. It leads to irritation and congestion of the lungs, which is the first stage of pneumonia. Such congestion frequently occurs when bathing on cold days, or from lying on the ground or on any cold surface after becoming overheated. It may be traced to carelessness in passing from a warm room to colder air outside without wearing the necessary protective clothing, or it may follow sitting in a draft after exercise.

Pneumonia is a serious disease. Its oncoming is sudden and often overwhelming. Its prevention is far easier than its cure. Protect against pneumonia at all times of the year. Do not neglect colds and infections. Avoid drafts and, above all, never allow yourself to become chilled.

Buying Meats For Only Two Is Problem

By MARTHA LEE

"I NEVER KNOW what meat to buy for two." Hasn't it a familiar sound? And can't you just picture the June Bride puzzling over the legs and loins on the meat counter?

It's easy to buy other foods in small quantity, but regardless of whether the shopper is experienced or otherwise, meat buying for two always seems to present a problem.

Steaks and chops, of course, are the standbys of the small family, and we have found that if the chops are cut four to the pound they are a good thickness and a pound will be sufficient for two.

The choice of meat need not be confined to steaks and chops. Chopped beef can be utilized in a small meat loaf or in patties. Wrapping a slice of bacon around the patty makes it more attractive and adds to the flavor.

Some meats that are particularly adapted for serving two are liver, kidneys, sweetbreads, sausages of all kinds, dried beef, ham slice, tenderloins and stews. Shoulder chops are one of the less expensive cuts and they are delicious baked in a casserole. The next time you want something different, get as many shoulder pork or lamb chops as you need and bake them in a creole sauce for 45 minutes.

Flank steaks are a good choice, too, and they can be prepared in any number of attractive ways. Mock duck is a popular way. Spread the flank steak with a well seasoned bread dressing and roll the steak so that when served it will be cut across the fibers. Then tie or skewer and place in a baking dish. Sear in a hot oven and when the meat is nicely browned, lower the temperature to 350 deg. F., pour 1 cup tomato juice or 1 cup water over the meat, cover and continue cooking for 1 hour.

If a small roast is desired, buy loin chops, as many as required, and have the retailer separate the bones at the joint, but do not have him cut the meat through. Bake as you would a standing rib roast.

Beauty Science Now Gives Us an Odorless Depilatory; We Welcome It Heartily

By Therese Deschamps

AT LAST we have found it—an odorless depilatory! In summer especially, when the bathing season is on, there is almost constant need for a depilatory. And many of them are extremely unpleasant to use because of the odor.

Today we came across one for the first time that has no odor whatever—at least none that our own personal nose could catch. And that is a great achievement.

Spread It On

It comes in a tube with an applicator. You spread it under the arm pits or on the arms or legs about 1-16-inch thick and leave it on five minutes by the clock. (Don't guess at the time.) If the skin has been shaved previously or if the hair is stubby it can be left on a minute or two longer. Then it should be washed off with lukewarm water. (Hot water or soap must not be used.) And that is all there is to it. Seven or eight minutes in the process and no unpleasantness.

We give a rising vote of thanks to its originator! Furthermore they claim that this project will in time discourage hair growth, and that what does grow in will be silkier, and softer. If that is true, it is good news. After we've used it for awhile we shall be able to say from our own experience whether or not the claim is justified.

Not for Face

Unfortunately, this new depilatory cannot be used on the face. Every day a letter or two arrives asking for advise on the latter. The best depilatories for the face—ones that are mild enough, are the waxes. Happily only a small portion of women have this beauty "ill." Electricity, too, is excellent for the face. One must, however, select a competent operator.

If you wish to know the name of this new depilatory, please write Therese Deschamps, Boston Evening American, 5 Winthrop Square, Boston. Enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope, please.

Squint Lines

Question: I am 19, and very much of an outdoor girl. I play tennis a lot in the hot sun, and spend whole days on the beach without wearing sun glasses. Lately I've noticed that from squinting, tiny faint lines are forming around my eyes and between my eyebrows. Would working on them now prevent their becoming deeper in time? What shall I do? MISS V. V. W.
Manomet.

Answer: You are a wise girl, [illegible] ... movement as follows might be practised at the same time, using a bit of nourishing cream: place the first finger ... close to the nose ... outward over the temple ... come back underneath the eye to the starting point.

Hand Cream

Question—Have you a formula for a hand cream? I do my own work and have my hands in and out of water many times a day.—Mrs. D. H. L., Brighton, Mass.

Answer—You might try this one: Soak 60 grains of gum tragacanth in 11 ounces of stronger rosewater for three days. Add one ounce of glycerine, one ounce of rubbing alcohol, a few drops of perfume.

Bow-Legs

Question—Have you any exercises to help a bow-legged person? If not exercises, some kind of massage? My knees and ankles are quite large and I should like to reduce them if possible. This is quite a drawback. Please try to help me.—"Desperate," Hyde Park, Mass.

Answer—I wish I could. The bone structure is at fault, you see. You might reduce your legs by vigorous massage pummeling, but that would not change the shape of the bones. I am sorry.

Just before [illegible] on each trip he would [illegible] a short speech to those who [illegible] him off.

"My friends," he would [illegible] return to my art. [illegible] and I must go back [illegible] prison. But before [illegible] I want you all to know [illegible] has not turned my [illegible]. Sometime during the winter I want you to visit me in New York, where everybody knows and [illegible]"

Last winter, they took advantage of his invitation. Several townfolk came to New York, and Oswald assumed charge of the party immediately. He told them that he was busy, very busy, but that he would give them a glimpse of Broadway's [illegible] on the following night.

The next night [illegible] to a newly opened speakeasy. He stepped out of his [illegible] ped his cane on the door, and watched the peephole open.

"Open up," Oswald demanded. "You know me. I'm Oswald Igglehoffer."

A voice [illegible] of the peephole.

"Don't know ya," [illegible] said. "Never heard of ya. Beat it. Scram."

The visitors began to titter. Oswald started to redden.

"Let me in," he bellowed. Then, aside to his guests, "This is just a gag."

Finally the manager came to the door. The racket was beginning to disturb his drinking. He peered out into the darkness.

"Who did you say you are?" he queried.

"Igglehoffer," replied our hero indignantly. "Surely you've heard of Oswald Igglehoffer!"

"Certainly," said the manager. "Positively. Come right in, Mr. [illegible]."

The company [illegible] in and the manager grabbed the hand of one of Oswald's friends.

"It's a pleasure to meet you, Mr. Igglehoffer," he [illegible] the wrong man. "I never [illegible] to read your books."

Oswald groaned aloud. But when he looked at the door through which he had just entered he almost fainted. At that moment he learned the true value of publicity.

THIS IS LIFE

By ROBERT E. ROGERS

Reflections after reading one of the very finest novels it has been my good fortune to read for a long long time. It is called "Not To Eat, Not For Love," is written by George Antony Weller, and is published by Harrison Smith and Robert Haas. It is a novel of present day Harvard life, and a few years ago before the House passed into effect; it tells the story of two years, 1929 to 1931, a year from September to June.

R. E. ROGERS

When I was a small boy I used to wonder what life was like when my father was a little boy. From the vantage ground of the early nineties I visualized his early seventies as a period dim and strange, lacking the modern improvements of my day, quaint and out of date. I have no doubt that my own daughter thinks of my boyhood and her mother's girlhood as something dim and historic, full of museum pieces. She cannot possibly appreciate the fact that her mother and I recognize no important differences between the life of today and that of 25 years ago. Such as exist are mechanical and unimportant. The essential identity remains.

No Change in Mood or Attitude

A few years ago the Harvard Dramatic Club revived a three act play called "Brown of Harvard," which, when first presented in Boston in 1908 or 1909, was pelted from the stage. The Dramatic Club, apparently in all seriousness and good faith, rigged it up in the costumes of the '90s and the manners thereof, so that it became a pathetic curio. As a matter of fact the piece, except for the undergraduate idiom, could be costumed in the clothes of 1933 and few would detect any anachronism.

That is probably why "Not to Eat, Not for Love" moved me so. I am celebrating my 25th next year, but except for certain formal, administrative changes, it might have been my college that young Mr. Weller is writing of. The Harvard mood and attitude and consciousness have not changed. Indeed, they are the same as in the famous "Harvard Stories" of Flandrau, published even before my time. Both Flandrau and Weller tell the truth. The two Harvards they describe are the same.

Wellers' undergraduates have to read harder than mine did, and the scholastic system is more complex and rigid and English than ours was. There are the freshman dormitories—though not yet the Houses—but the mood of undergraduate life in 1929 is exactly that of 1909. The same activities function in the same way; the same groups unconsciously differentiate from other groups; Harvard still is the least homogeneous place on earth, the most highly diversified, and yet pervaded by an attitude which is primarily an absence of attitude. That is what the uninformed speak of as "Harvard indifference" without the slightest idea what it means.

The novel is not a well-knit single narrative. One Junior, Epes Todd, has one out of every three chapters to himself. But he is not very important and not very interesting, and towards the end of the book his aesthetic and moral hesitations as to whether he shall get married and drop college or get his degree and keep away from the girl are pretty monotonous and dull. I suspect that he is autobiographical, especially in one scene in which he and a tutor, Jason Pont, settle the Harvard universe. If Jason Pont is not Conrad Aiken, the Poet, I miss my guess.

Snapshots From All Angles

But Todd is only one-third. The other two-thirds are a clamjamfery of most possible kinds of person in college, snapshots of Cambridge from all angles, every hour of the day and every season of the year. There is the boy who loved to play football for its own sake, even on the class team, knowing he would never get any higher. The law school man putting himself through college by all kinds of profit-making devices. The Harvard boys kidding the visiting Yale boy who believes in fraternities, and realizing that they do so because they are not and never will be club material.

The promising student who is expelled without notice because he came up on the New York boat with a girl. The social climber with his eye on the hockey managership. The robust old dramatic coach whom the boys would like to get rid of and can't. The social history of Apthorp House. The boy who nearly made the wrong club. Assorted professors and tutors, most of them nearly recognizable. The English A instructor who didn't get reappointed. The Boston newspapermen writing Harvard sports.

And so forth and so on, ending with the boy who refuses to get out of his dormitory room after Commencement and barricades his door—because he can't bear to leave the place. I remember my own Commencement afternoon and the tough little fellow from the West who broke down and cried when he tried to tell us good-bye. Mr. Weller sees all, knows all, interprets all with brilliant sensitiveness.

Occasionally he breaks out in a rash of stupid, expressionistic, sur-realistic prose, like an embryo e. e. cummings, but it doesn't last. It doesn't really hurt the book and he will get over it.

Harvard the Same Despite Changes

I suppose that if the book had described a brand new Harvard I shouldn't have cared for it at all. It is the fact that the more it changes the more it is the same—as the French say—that interests me so. It is till permeated with the gentleman's motto "three C's and a D—and keep out of the newspapers." In spite of all the vast machinery of concentrations, divisionals, tutors and reading lists which the new dispensation ha set up.

And, as both Weller and Flandrau show, an impassible gulf lies between the undergraduates who are on the inside of Harvard, so to speak, who know what it is all about, and that far greater number who attend but never penetrate, who never know what it is all about and do never know that there is anything to know. This is a story of those who know, in their varying fashions, and is written for those who know. It is not all Harvard but it is all that part of it which establishes its mood and character.

And, incidentally, the novel itself utterly gives the lie to its ironic title.

GOVERNOR'S LETTER

In familiarizing myself with the situation in your department as it is relation to the office of the district attorney, I have come to feel that there should be a closer cooperation.

"If I am correctly informed you have two men detailed to the district attorney's office—one a patrolman completely occupied with desertion and similar cases—and one man from the B. C. I.

"In my opinion, this is not a sufficient detail for the preparation of cases in that office. I think, you should select at least two others of your best equipped men from the B. C. I. for detail to the office of the district attorney if he is willing.

"I further feel that you should make special effort to train properly several men whose duties should be confined to the preparation and presentation of cases in the municipal court, under the guidance of the district attorney's office.

"If, of course, goes without saying that the men for these various positions should be carefully chosen, particularly for the work in the municipal court, in order that you may be sure that a sharp eye is kept on the ends of justice.

"An. Further observe the workings of the department and the need of other changes, I shall take it the liberty of communicating my ideas to you."

Upon receipt of the letter, Commissioner Hultman issued the following statement:

"The communication from the Governor contains constructive suggestions relating to court procedure. In my opinion the Governor's suggestions are extremely valuable and I shall take steps at once to proceed along the lines suggested by him."

"Hey" Salutation Is Insult to Rhadames, "Biggest" Star of Opera "Aida" Cast

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

Take it from Rhadames [illegible] (Show business [illegible]) it is again on its way [illegible] Rhadames, by all odds [illegible] a star the world ever [illegible] that you can measure [illegible] and stay [illegible] papers to relate [illegible] Rhadames is heaps [illegible] or Amato [illegible] singer the [illegible] I found Rh[adames] [illegible] away at his dinner [illegible] style, served at 6 each ev[ening] [illegible] taking in all the [illegible] preparations at Braves Field [illegible] Giuseppi Verdi opus in which [illegible] shine tonight. Rhadames [illegible] the landscape, then tossed [illegible] the wind.

Came a sudd[en] [illegible] silence as we [illegible] weather prosp[ects] [illegible]

"Hay, Eddie," [illegible] a uniformed attendant among the an-i-miles who are going to take part in the triumphal march in the opera tonight.

"That's an insult," grunted Rhadames, peeved. "Tough when these fellows slap you in the face with the food you have to eat," I commiserated.

"Hay or spinach, what difference does it make?" queried Rhadames. "Some like oatmeal, some take in gruel, but I like mine straight. Now, Caruso greatest of them all, loved his spaghetti best of all. And yet nobody ever yelled macaroni-masticator at him, so why should they mock me with their 'Hey, hey!'"

Another [illegible] this from Rhadames.

"Meet my twin brother—he co-stars with me in the opera. His name is Verdi."

"Pleased to meet you," I said. But I noticed Verdi did not proffer his Gargantuan hand for a shake.

Verdi began to open up on music, coloratura taking a [illegible] us whack at the tenors, when I urged it might be better not to talk shop — [illegible] careers, I emphasized.

"The editor wants a human interest story," I explained.

Rhadames lifted his trunk, he says he never [illegible] get out of his sight—he won't have any baggagemen kicking it around. Let other thespians consign their trunks to the hands of strange[rs] [illegible] Rhadames and Verdi are [illegible] in their determination to hang onto theirs.

Rhadames showed me the white of his "teeth."

"I can tickle the ivories, too," he boasted.

"I can trumpet, also—better'n any of Cab Calloway's jazzers."

And he did, just to show off. The camels, the oxen and the rest of the an-i-miles nearby looked up from their evening meal.

[illegible] the brothers I had once [illegible] in Africa.

[illegible]" exclaimed Rhadames. "Africa? We come from India—we're upper crust, top caste, the Brahmins of our kind. Our Afric kin are dumb, all the operatic talent lies in us, fellow countrymen of Mahatma Gandhi. The only difference between him and us is that we long ago discarded the loin cloth. We are nudists."—

"Sh-sh-sh," said Verdi. "They have censors in Boston."

"Among Pachyderms," said the wise Rhadames, "there is no immodesty."

Suddenly a whistle blew [illegible] was the call for dress rehearsal.

I had to pose Rhadames [illegible] to get the picture printed herewith. Then off he tramped to take part in the process[ion].

"Hey," I called, "Good luck to you both."

Stung by my [illegible] word, Rhadames yelled back:

"An elephant never forgets—nuts to you!"

The Voice of Broadway

By Louis Sobol

Broadway Merry-Go-Round

California papers, reports Variety, are bubbling in frenzied fervor over the epidemic of divorces—offering bonuses and raises for exclusives on every pending smashup of celebrated film couples. The front pages erupt daily in a rash of excitement over each succeeding divorce and you must forgive the Broadway commentators for tittering. It's been part of their daily routine and most of them have been bitterly censured for devoting so much of their space to divorce and marital forecasts, yet 90 per cent of the stories crowding the front pages of the Coast papers were first broken—sometimes months ahead—by one or the other of the Broadway columnists.

And this is true, too, of other types of stories. The first hint of the Dempsey-Williams merger came through this department. The first hint of the secret marriage of Helen Morgan to Maurice Maschke, Jr., appeared in a contemporary's column. That the Aimee McPherson-David Hutton combo was splitting was first reported by a local paragrapher. That the evangelistic lass was to desert the West and establish an Eastern tabernacle in Manhattan was reported here. It was a Broadway columnist who predicted that Will Woodin would be Roosevelt's choice for the Treasury at a time when every other name was being mentioned. And so you [illegible] pardon the columnists if they [illegible] newspapermen of the old school who [illegible] that the Broadway column is [illegible] journalism and at its best mere [illegible] Despite [illegible] the Broadway column has [illegible] from a news viewpoint its important moments.

Within a few weeks, Billie Burke Ziegfeld's production of the "Follies" will start ahead full blast. It's no secret, or shouldn't be by now, that another producing firm is behind the project but it plans to keep in the background, realizing the sentimental value of the Ziegfeld name in the person of his widow. There is sentimental significance, too, that the "Follies" will reunite Bobby Connolly and Arthur Swanstrom as a team, for Swanstrom with Lou Alter as his musical aid will provide the book and lyrics and Connolly will direct. Incidentally, and you may thank me, Swanstrom and Connolly are seeking original skits for the production. You may flood them with your scripts at 234 West 44th st.

Florence Reed had her [illegible] Monday night in Atlantic City. For years, ever since Philadelphia banned her show, "Shanghai Gesture," the emotional lass has been storing up her resentment. At the conclusion of her revival of "Shanghai Gesture" Monday night, she let out, as the naive saying goes. Stepping out in front of the curtain she assembled her choicest adjectives and adverbs and for 10 minutes explained to the audience what she thought of the Philadelphia censors. Then she broke down and wept, but a good time was had by all.

From the Coast drifts report of the bitter feud that has cropped up between Eddie Cantor and George Jessel, once inseparables. There was never a more loyal friendship than that which existed between the pair, with Cantor assuming the fond paternal and protective attitude. Together they broke records in the old Palace. It was Cantor who named Jessel in all his successor [illegible] radio hour which he deserted temporarily. There were [illegible] hints that Eddie and George had made provisions in their wills whereby each, in the case of death, bequeathed his collection of gag material to the survivor. But something happened—there are many versions—and the boys no longer care in the great big affectionate way.

Jeanette MacDonald will head [illegible] shortly, and according to friends will be [illegible] that she is secretly the [illegible] of Robert Ritchie, her [illegible] Incidentally, the Press Club of Paris doesn't know whether to feel happy or not that [illegible] MacDonald [illegible] withdrew her [illegible] against one of its members [illegible] accepted an apology instead. For Jeanette had promised [illegible] if she won the $10,000 [illegible] which she demanded to [illegible] wounded feelings she would [illegible] the entire sum over to the Press Club.

There isn't a speakeasy proprietor in the East who won't tell you that he's convinced the 18th amendment will be repealed by next year. Each is certain that prohibition is a thing of the past. They shouldn't feel too happy about it, for repeal, apparently, would knock the props clear away from their type of business. Realizing this, they've begun preparations already. Where, heretofore, most of them have featured the quality of their liquors, you will notice now that attention is being concentrated on the food and the varieties of food.

Los Angeles, July 20—Warner Brothers and Kay Francis are inclined to be superstitious they might have prophetic qualms about The House on 56th Street." Jack Warner plunked down his cash when Joseph Santley, author, sold him the idea for Ruth Chatterton. Miss Chatterton vetoed it because she felt that it was too much on the "Lily Turner" idea

Irene Dunne was a bit hesitant about being rescued from Radio when she decided against the feminine role because she thought it was too much like Kay Francis. Irene has made a name for herself in sophisticated comedies and she thought it would be a mistake to step into Kay's shoes. Kay has been playing Woman with Louella Parsons Edward Robinson

The picturesque waterfront of San Francisco is the background for an original story which Paramount bought from Frederick Schlick. Mr Schlick is one of the few writers who has been able to sell a story in our town. Most of the pictures that reach the screen are based on successful novels or plays. He is calling his present number "The Man Who Broke His Heart." I suspect Miriam Hopkins will be cast for she is the lady for whom Emmanuel Cohen bought it.

New Pickford Film

The idea that Mary Pickford had of forming an independent company with Frances Marion and Lawrence H Hall has been practically abandoned. Mary says she feels it is many theaters going that are bankrupted it would be the height of folly to put on an independent production now. She will make a picture for United Artists, the company with which she is associated as producer and star. Richard Barthelmess, who was reported as planning to join the new Pickford organization has two more pictures to make for Warner Bros and is still under contract there.

Two additions are to be made to Kelly Stewart's Ever-Green Heart—Ralph Bellamy, who plays the sweetheart, and Otto Kruger, who is only the husband. "Baby Face," starring Barbara Stanwyck, is packing them in for Warner Bros. Does that mean the dear public likes to see those girls who leave the straight and narrow and make a profitable living?

Ralph Bellamy

Much fast talking when the report was printed that Paramount intended to film James Branch Cabell's "Jurgen." A lot of breath might have been saved for this is one book that would be beyond even the imaginative movies. George Brent and Ruth Chatterton started work today on "Female." The real truth of the Brent matter is that George felt it might be better for both him and Ruth if he were cast in another picture. The story seemed so essentially suited to him that he finally agreed to make screen love to his wife. William Powell has emerged from his seclusion to start work on "The Kennel Murder Case" at Warner Brothers. Bill will talk about everything but his troubles with Carole Lombard. That matter is still a sore subject. Eugene Pallette, who has been in every one of the Philo Vance pictures again plays a part opposite Powell

Eddy in Debut

The much-publicized Nelson Eddy, who arrived in town with secretaries, a chauffeur and what have you, has made his first test for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. More than a test, he has made his first scenes. He sings in "In the Garden of My Dreams" and "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling" for "The March of Time." And that, my dears, will be his debut picture

Chatter in Hollywood:

The film people who were invited to meet Elliott Roosevelt some three months ago at the home of a Hollywood producer and his wife had no idea the lady with him was to figure so prominently in the newspapers Mr Roosevelt was most attentive to her and made no secret of his feelings. Miss Googins, who is a petite brunette, vivacious and with charming Southern manners, seemed to reciprocate. There is little doubt that there was some understanding between the two, and the report that he has gone to Chicago to meet her is no surprise to the people in the film colony who were dinner guests in Beverly Hills that night

Snapshots of Hollywood:

The SUE CAROL-KENNETH MURRAY romance seems headed straight for the altar: Sue gave him a platinum watch for his birthday; she and NICK STUART, her ex, are on the best of terms and seem to have a friendly understanding; NICK, meanwhile, consoles himself with BORIS ARNST; Hollywood is wondering where the boys and girls will go now the Colony Club is due to close, several prominent film men will be practically homeless, the JOEL McCREA-FRANCES DEE romance, told of first in this column, will not be cemented until FRANCES finishes in "Little Women"; report was current that the two youngsters had already eloped; STAN LAUREL was lunching with his daughter, LOIS at the Beverly Derby and busing her everything in the place. He said the LAURELS are considering a reconciliation, CLAUDETTE COLBERT in smart black linen at Scotts; DOROTHEA WIECK chattering German a mile a minute at the Grove; She was escorted by KARL MESSNER, a brewer from Munich, and MAJOR UDET; CHARLIE CHAPLIN still going places with PAULINE GODDARD dining and dancing at the Grove BERNICE WHEELER and BERT'S ex, said to be a silent partner in the Russian Alliance Club, a place to dance and dine and eat Russian food. That's all today See you tomorrow

John Drew Colt in Maine Play Cast

Leighton Rollins announces the opening of The Surry Players' fifth season at the Criterion theater, Bar Harbor, Me., at today's matinee. Philip Barry's gay comedy, "The Youngest," is the play, in which John Drew Colt, youngest member of the Barrymore clan, will have the leading role. Additional performances will be given the evening of July 20 and the afternoon and evening of July 21.

Into the intimacy of the home steps the news photographer in film land. The above picture was taken in the Beverly Hills residence of Lionel Barrymore. He and Mrs. Barrymore entertained notables of Hollywood at a dinner party, and as they chatted in lively and informal fashion after the feast, the cameraman turned his lens on the group in which host and hostess were prominent. At the left is Helen Hayes, regarded as one of the greatest actress of screen (some think of stage too), and next to her is that grand actor, Lionel himself. Then has the distinction of being a star of the footlights, Irene Fenwick; then, and last, Gary Cooper, first rank leading man, who was Miss Hayes' beau in the great picture, "A Farewell to Arms." Lionel of the Royal Family of Barrymores is thus seen with some of Hollywood's best talent. International News photo

Broken Ankle Led to Film Fame

By HARRIS MORGAN

For Miriam Hopkins life has been one long list of mishaps And yet it was misfortune that gave her a "break" that has landed her in the film firmament among the stars

"They tell me it's an ill wind, and say, you're asking me?" she begins the interview. "Why, if it hadn't been for a broken ankle," she adds, "I probably wouldn't be a motion picture star today."

Miss Hopkins explains that she began her career as a dancer on the broadway stage

"Finally I had an opportunity to go to South America with a ballet company," she relates. "I was thrilled at the chance to further my dancing career on this tour, but on the eve of sailing I fell and broke my ankle. "After weeks with my ankle in a cast, the doctors eventually pronounced judgment. My career as a dancer was ended as far as ballet work was concerned. The injury would never stand the severe strain of toe-dancing. But the good luck that followed was my switching from dancing to acting. I landed a job in "Little Jesse James" and played a solid year on Broadway."

Star Selects Two Stories for Production in Near Future

By REGINA CREWE
Motion Picture Editor N. Y. American

Stars may wax and stars may wane but there is one among them who retains her hold upon the popular imagination and affection. When Gloria Swanson appears there you will find an enraptured throng delighting in the presence of this Queen of the Screen. A star of 50 pictures during her exceptional career, Gloria's fame has grown rather than diminished. Her popularity, and the challenge of countless newcomers, for her supremacy appears merely to enhance the definite value in the esteem of the picturegoing public.

Crashing on the [illegible] were not only beautiful women and millions to be [illegible] princesses and all manner of interesting folk. But from the hour that the names of Mr and Mrs Michael Farmer were spotted in the passenger list Gloria was the topic of all promenade deck and steamer chair conversation. It wasn't merely the curious comment one might expect, but [illegible] that evidenced genuine interest in the star, her pictures, her romance her babies, everything connected with her. She was regarded as a warm friend—"Gloria to everyone forthwith."

Gloria Swanson

One of the charming qualities of the star is that even after a year's isolation she has received as much [illegible] as if she were [illegible] of this world. Another of her [illegible] always dies [illegible] compliance with any reasonable request of press or public. Gloria and Michael abandoned the quiet of their suite and became part of the [illegible] guests. When [illegible] the gala at the Biltmore [illegible] at the [illegible] [illegible] and many a lad will remember that occasion as the one on which he tapped to dance rounds with Gloria as partner. A [illegible] for autographs [illegible] you imagine!

Portraits of the three youngsters, little Gloria, Joseph and Michele Brigette, the baby, were prominent in the Farmer living room, and their mother's discover 6000 miles of land and sea was inspired by the great news that Michele had cut her first tooth and was beginning to walk. This was too much for Gloria, and production of new pictures simply had to wait.

[illegible] business was [illegible] much time [illegible] and his definite [illegible] for future screen [illegible] Never let them be a [illegible] In fact no comedy has [illegible] with [illegible] at present [illegible] of a drama [illegible] she didn't say [illegible] purpose both here [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] be a talkie of [illegible] Sins Gone," a success [illegible]

With all this news of marital crack-ups in the movie colony, it is a pleasure to report that there is no danger of domestic calamity in the Swanson-Farmer menage. If there was ever a devoted couple it is "Mike" and Gloria. And their happiness [illegible] kind that will last a long, long time.

Bill McKechnie Completes His 4-Year Contract

Fuchs Irons Out Financial Affairs With the Braves

By AUSTEN LAKE

The joint affairs of Judge Fuchs and Bill McKechnie of the Braves today are bracketed with an October morning, four years ago, when Bill and the Judge had thrust aside the crusts and pinds of their breakfast in the Parkway Hotel of Chicago, and were slumping down for a second and earnest conversation. For today is the critical moment when the affairs of the two are balancing on the ability of Judge Fuchs to raise his finances back to health just as then their relationship was at the starting point.

It was a frosty morning on the day the 1929 World Series opened in Chicago that the late Nick Flatley and I called on Fuchs Nick, a tiny Irishman with a curious trick of smiling on one side of his face, had a sixth sense for news ("I smell something burnin'" he would say, with his wry grin), and suspected that Fuchs had something on the fire.

In a remote corner of the grill we found Fuchs, sitting with Bill McKechnie, the former tracing patterns on the table cloth with six forks, and the latter teetering on his chair legs with the smug expression of a cat who has just digested a canary. To me the situation was not at all compromising, since McKechnie was under contract to the Cardinals and the sight of rival baseball chiefs hobnobbing during the World Series carnival was commonplace enough. But to Nick, with his quick penetration, it meant something different.

"Gonna make it an afternoon release?" asked Nick, measuring the Judge from under his fuzzy brows.

I noticed that Bill fidgeted nervously, while his large Adam's apple bobbed up and down several times. But the Judge merely swivelled around and started the stomach tremor, which, by long observation, we knew would ultimately turn into a liquid gurgle of a laugh. We waited until the laugh was born, listening for the final sigh that marked its end.

"A little later," said the Judge, who is no hand to fence with his friends. "But, mind you, Bill is coming as a builder, not so much as a field manager. It will take four years to get results, so Bill gets a four-year contract."

The End of McKechnie's Four-Year Trail

This, then, is within two months of the moment when Bill would, in the normal course of things, render account for his four year stewardship, though the crisis in Fuchs' affairs today moves the date somewhat ahead. Bill only lately told a gathering of five hundred sport fans at a Cambridge athletic night, that if Judge Fuchs did not stay with the Braves, he did not want to stay either. And he said it with so much dramatic emphasis that it brought a round of cheering, though the crowd hardly understood what they were shouting for.

So, as Fuchs goes today so goes McKechnie. Which brings another memory to mind, that in which Charles F. Adams, the ready-money man of Boston sport, told me:

"If I ever owned a ball club and could not get McKechnie to manage it, I would name Rogers Hornsby quick as scat."

Charley went on to say that Hornsby was an "owner's manager, like Art Ross," which, of course, is a hard boiled, hell-for-leather type of man who would rip those who oppose his boss from stem to gudgeon.

No doubt, should the Judge's foot finally slip, that Adams would go to such an extreme as naming Rogers, who is going to be turned out by the Cardinals after this season. For, although Adams has a steady business nerve and a fondness for slapping bullies Hornsby to the Boston fans would be like a corsage of ragweed to hayfever addicts, not to mention a red undershirt to an angry bull.

Yet my understanding is that Fuchs' affairs are pretty well straightened out at the moment and by paying $150,000 on account he has salvaged control of the club for another year or so, which means that McKechnie can look forward to a renewal of his contract in the fall. I know, at the moment, if Bill were free, that there are six other major league clubs which would grab up his services with the eagerness that a hungry man snatches an unguarded hamburger. The mortality among managers this season has been very heavy, and there is a scarcity of managerial timber to take their places.

Only Four Left from 1930 Crop

I recall the curl of scorn with which Bill looked over his material when he first took charge of the Braves training camp in the spring of 1930. It was a motley crew of castoffs.

"Plenty of coughs in this carload," said Bill "About one in four is worth saving.'

At that, time has proved Bill's estimate high. Although he took that rheumatic squad into sixth place that year, today there are only four of those men left, Maranville, Brandt, Cantwell and Spohrer. As for the rest, only two have managed to keep their noses above the major league level. Eddie Farrell of the New York Yankees and Zack Taylor of the Chicago Cubs.

Only once in the four-year interval has Fuchs lost patience with Bill and that was when, in the fall of 1931, the boys bogged down after running 1-2 up to August. Some of the lads, according to hearsay, had been whooping it up, and Fuchs, always a bitter loser, ("Show me a good loser, and I'll show you a poor competitor"—John McGraw) raked Bill's hide over the grill. Bill of course, did not know that his men were cutting capers, which is not surprising. I recall the complaint of Heinie Wagner, when he was manager of the Red Sox in 1930.

"The manager is the last man to know when there is monkey business going on," he said.

The last man, yes, unless the manager is a McGraw type. Mac was his own policeman, father confessor, and loan broker. He was checking his men in at midnight in the lobby of the Brunswick Hotel a few years back. One by one they trooped by as McGraw ticked them off mentally. Finally came Hugh McQuillan. "G'night Mac," carolled Hugh, with a flourish of his paw. McGraw watched the pitcher ascend in the elevator. It was a matter of a minute for Hugh to scuttle down the back hall and into the freight elevator, and another minute before he stepped out of the service entrance.

"A beautiful evening," said McGraw, coming out of the shadows and taking the astonished pitcher by the elbow. "Look at those stars! Smell that salt air! It's great to be alive."

"Yes," faltered McQuillan, "It certainly is."

"And now," said McGraw, his voice becoming hard, "take a good look, because it's costing you $50."

Under McKechnie, sixty-odd, some of them very odd, players have come and gone, during which the club has spent a quarter of a million dollars. On the whole he has made more out of less than any other manager in the majors and, some years, has defied the laws of baseball gravity by keeping a club aloft by its own boot straps. His four-year record reads like this up to the present moment:

1930. McKechnie	78	84	.455	Sixth
1931. McKechnie	61	90	.416	Seventh
1932. McKechnie	77	77	.500	Fifth
1933. McKechnie (unfinished)	43	44	.494	Fifth

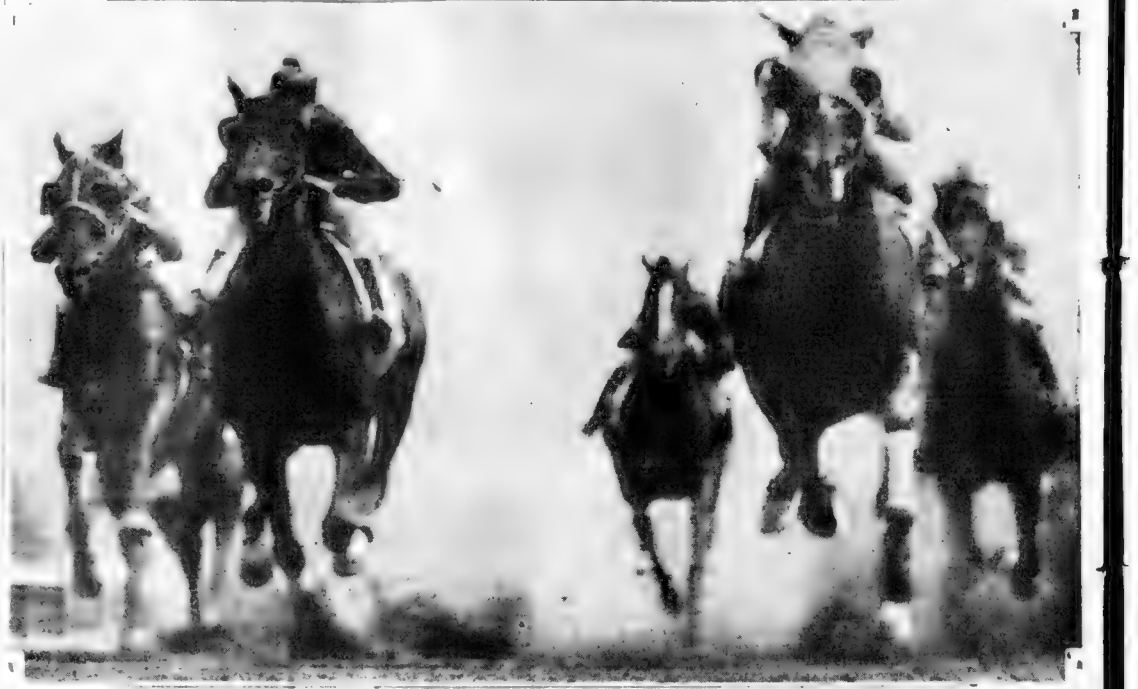
Thundering Hoofs Beat Dust Into Gold in Rockingham Racers' Meeting



Here they come, thundering down the stretch at Rockingham in the fifth race, as hammering hoofs send dust swirling until the sunlight turns the yellow cloud to gold. Gold in more ways than one, for the thoroughbreds' flying hoofs have helped beat out a $4,000,000-plus total on the pari-mutuel machines. Shrine Day drew close to 30,000 fans, who bet $361,826 on seven races. Fifty-seven thousand, three hundred and fifty-six dollars was wagered on the fifth race, the Aleppo Temple Purse. The meet handle may go to $5,000,000.

U. S. NET VICTOR SAYS SUZANNE

(Universal Service Special Cable)

Paris, July 20—Everybody believes the Americans will win except the players themselves. How can they lose?"

That was the way Suzanne Lenglen, six time Wimbledon champion, summed up the chance of the American Davis Cup team, which will meet Britain in Roland Garros stadium, beginning tomorrow, Friday, in the interzone finals for the right to meet France in the challenge round.

Baron G. Prentice, American non-playing captain, who concedes his squad a 2-to-1 chance on paper, looked on the situation as certain. Lenglen, Wimbledon champion, Lott, John Van Ryn and Keith Gledhill to stay away from the stadium and take a long rest instead of hitting balls on the practice courts. Indications that Prentice thinks the boys are fit.

Vines to Meet Austin in First Singles Match

Paris, July 6 (AP)—The draw for the Davis Cup interzone tennis competition today puts Ellsworth Vines, the American champion, against Henry W. (Bunny) Austin, of England, in the first of the singles matches tomorrow on the Roland Garros stadium court.

Wilmer Allison will play Fred Perry the Britain No. 1 star, in the second singles match of the series, which is to decide the challenger of France for the international trophy.

Neither team disclosed its doubles line-up formally but John Van Ryn and George M. Lott, Jr., the American combination, were expected to oppose Perry and George Patrick Hughes.

The doubles will be played Saturday, followed on Sunday by the closing two singles encounters in which Austin opposes Allison and Vines meets Perry.

Singles play tomorrow is scheduled to start at 2:15 p. m.

Lack of Minor Leagues Is Peril to Majors

By JOE CASHMAN

St Louis Mo., July 20—An article, warning movie magnates of the dangers of a high-hat policy which discourages youthful aspirants to film fame, recently came to the notice of this corner.

The author declared that the studio heads had time and time again only for experienced players and pointed that this practice of ignoring the raw would cause a later lead to the downfall of the flicker industry by depriving it of capable successors to the current luminaries of the silver screen.

Hie, the young man or maybe it's a young woman, who wrote the piece merely substituted baseball for movie magnates, he or she would have hit a diamond nail squarely on the head.

Big league baseball has become entirely too high-hat towards the rookie for its own good. It isn't that the club owners want to be aloof. On the contrary, they are as interested as ever in the boy and desire to follow baseball as a career. But they haven't the means to help him realize his ambition.

YOUTHS NEED CHANCE

It requires minor leagues to prepare candidates for stardom in fast company, and there aren't half enough high-grade leagues left of the sorts once are clamoring for a chance to start that long climb towards the top.

Every season a big league club is forced to pass up dozens of promising performers for want of spots to put them in work.

On this present trip of the Braves through the West five boys have applied to Bill McKechnie for a trial. One of them has been tried on a big league hitting outfielder named Bob Cope from Mt. Union College who worked out in Pirate. And was sent to the Braves farm at Harrisburg.

There was a pitcher in Pittsburgh and two pitchers in outfielder at Chicago, to whom any league outfit would like to experiment, but they had to be turned away. No room for them.

NO BERTH FOR SLUGGER

The fly chaser in the Windy City answered to the name of Red Pace and he just paced the Tribal regulars with the stick in batting practice. A natural slugger if there ever was one, but as "green" as they make 'em.

"You look pretty good up at that plate," McKechnie told him after the workout, "but now that you've showed me your stuff, the question is where am I going to find a spot for you?"

"I know," replied "Red." "It's the same story. I'm told by every manager who looks me over. Jobs are sure scarce. I pick up $8 now and then in semipro ball, but it's tough getting by that way."

"Well, be around on our next visit here and maybe I can fix you up," McKechnie told him, and the boy promised he would be on hand.

He probably will be. He's the type that would rather play ball than eat, and if there were no other way would stick to the sandlots until he became good enough for an available pro opening.

Many of these lads, though, are likely to become discouraged when they can't catch on, find some other employment and be lost to the diamond for good.

MAJORS NEED TALENT

The majors can ill afford to let that happen very often, with more schools and colleges cutting out baseball every day.

It's quite a problem. More minor leagues are needed, but those still in existence are finding it difficult to make both ends meet.

The majors might sponsor bush circuits, but few of the clubs under the main tent are overburdened with prosperity as it is.

What the solution is, we don't pretend to know. All the same it stands to reason that some way must be found to give the boy, who wants to play pro ball and shows promise, a chance to develop, if the big show is to continue to prosper.

ALICE BRIDGES QUALIFIES

New York, N. Y., July 20 (AP)—Paced by Alice Bridges of Whitinsville, Mas., seven of the country's fleetest girl swimmers today qualified for the finals of the 100-meter free style at the penning of the National A. A. U. championships at Jones Beach.

Miss Bridges, swimming in the first heat, covered the distance in 1:12 1-10, nearly six seconds slower than Helen Madison's world record of 1:06 4-5.

Lenora Kight, of Homestead, Penn., favorite to sweep the free-style events, easily qualified with a victory in the second heat, swimming the century in 1:13 to beat Dorothea Dickinson of the Women's Swimming Association of New York by a clear cut margin of three-tenths of a second.

Other qualifiers were: Olive Hatch, Los Angeles A. C., Lisa Lindstrom, and Helen Hendry, W. S. A. of N. Y., and Johanna Gorman, teammate of Miss Kight from the Carnegie Library Club of Homestead.

Chisox Visit Fenway; Red Hose Shift Due

By DAVID F. EGAN

The thump of large Dale Alexander was still missing today, when the Chicago White Sox stormed into town to meet the Red Sox.

Alexander has been missed and by. The big fellow packs in his hits with great regularity and h hits happen to be the sole difference between defeat and victory. For the past few days, Foreman Marty McManus' workers have lost their games by a single run.

On Tuesday, they lost, 2-1, despite the sweetest pitching of Lloyd Brown. Yesterday they lost once again, 8-7. The one-run defeats are gradually driving Foreman Martin Joseph McManus cuh-razy.

After the overtime game he drooped into a sulk. The 33-year old manager likes to win his ball games, and hates to lose them. He has friends in the newspaper business, but he brushed them aside without a word when he left the clubhouse.

ABSENCE OF ALEX HURTS

The entire answer is the absence of Alexander. The big hulk can hit. When a club is losing the one-run games, it is because the hitters are not coming through in the pinches. A puncher like Alexander, who led the American League in batting last year, spells the difference between defeat and victory in the close ones.

Roy Johnson has been doing some standout awaiting. I wouldn't know the figures because Col. Egan is just a baseball fan, and not a statistician, but I do know that Johnson has driven home more runs than any of the Red Sox.

With Alexander in there, the team would be winning the close games that they have played. With him out, they have been bleeding to death by inches, which is one of the hard ways to die.

SOX SHAKEUP AHEAD

There is going to be another shakeup one of these bright days. Marty McManus isn't satisfied with the way in which the club is trailing. Very few persons agree with him, but he thinks that he has first division material. He stalked out there himself yesterday; benched Johnny Hodapp, played second base and then discovered that Levey, which have been out of action for weeks, were not able to stand the strain.

Your enjoy didn't know who would be in his p m. This statement would be no outstanding surprise for McManus did not know himself. He likes Wurstler and Walters and Cooke and Johnson and Ferrell.

Otherwise the club is ready for immediate reorganization. If the young men do not deliver they will be shipped most promptly into the hinterlands.

Meanwhile the Chicago White Sox are here to do battle. They are headed by one of the greatest ball players of all the ages, Al Simmons.

Simmons, so they say, imitates every move that Ty Cobb made, for Cobb was his idol. He wears his sleeves long, just as Cobb did. He wears his trousers way down his shanks, in genuine plus-6 style. And he busts them, even as well as Cobb did.

Simmons hasn't the temperament and the color of Cobb. He hasn't that sparkling speed. Yet he is probably the best outfielder of this day and age, even after judicious consideration of the claims of "Chuck" Klein, the Waner boys, "Kiki" Cuyler, a fellow by the name of Ruth and all the others.

Our red headed laddies are not leading the league, or even close to it, but even though they haven't won as many games as they believe they should have, they are still pretty tough, and those boys from Chicago, who are here for a four-game stay, will certainly find it out.

Cash Ready in Fuchs' Plan to Take Control of Braves

Judge Emil Fuchs president of the Boston Braves, is reported as prepared to pay $100,000 to those associates in the ownership of the National League baseball club to day as a first payment in his move to again complete control of the organization. The plan was first revealed exclusively in the Boston Evening American a few weeks ago.

It is understood that further payments will be made over an extended period until the judge once more has the control over the baseball club which was his. Loans made to him by Adams and Wetmore had practically transferred the actual control of the club to them.

The date for the first payment in the judge's campaign to gain control of the team is set for today. The Navin group will complete organization and decide on its attitude toward the Fuchs plan to regain his control, or ... tion entry in the league.

All those associated with ownership of the club refused comment on the situation today as to what amount of money changes hands. However, it has been learned that $100,000 is the amount which Judge Fuchs will hand over today.

HAGEN AND SARAZEN DENOUNCED BY ARMOUR

'KILLING GOOSE' BY PASSING UP P. G. A. PLAY

- Chicago, July 20 (AP)- America's veteran golf professionals notably Gene Sarazen and Walter Hagen are attempting to kill the trusty goose that laid their golden eggs, Tommy Armour said today in a blistering attack against those players who threaten to pass up the annual national pro championship at Blue Mound, Milwaukee next month

"Say, if it wasn't for golf and an organization like the P. G. A. fellows like Hagen, Sarazen, Shute, Wood and myself probably would be lucky to have ordinary paying jobs today instead of strutting around like heroes with plenty of cash in our pockets," Armour said explosively. "And yet those fellows, sent over to England with all expenses paid to lose the Ryder cup, say August is too early for them to compete for the national professional championship. What do they mean too early? I know for a fact that they have been squawking for years to have the P. G. A. championship played earlier than September as they could make some money out of it. Now they balk. They're just trying to kill the goose that laid their golden egg, that's all.

"There is some excuse for Shute I suppose. After his hard victory in the British Open, you can't blame him much for taking his chance to clean up."

The trouble with most professional golfers, Tommy finds, is that they take themselves too seriously after they've won a few championships and are just about "washed up" from a competition standpoint.

"Hagen, Sarazen and myself are three outstanding golfers because we're just about all we ever were and don't know it," the silver pest, who has won almost every important title on both sides of the Atlantic continued. "We're living on our reputations and think we're more important than the game of golf itself. Well, we're mistaken. The game will be played long after we're gone and probably will be played a whole lot better. The younger players are coming up fast, both in the amateur and professional ranks. The P. G. A. and the Milwaukee tournament boosters would be smart to forget all about us and go after the younger players. Pass 'em up and sign them the play."

Primo Wins in Tragic Battle With Schaaf

CHARLEY NINE
By PRIMO CARNERA
Heavyweight Boxing Champion

[illegible] 10 per cent of his share of the gate. When Sharkey outpointed the German and won the decision in June, 1932, his manager declared that Schmeling could get another fight with Jack provided the German take 10 per cent.

Meanwhile, Max Baer had rushed to the front, Schaaf's managers sought big money and he arranged to get a champion's share in a match with Baer.

PRIMO GETS SCHAAF BOUT

[illegible] was so violently denounced as July fight with the late Ernie Schaaf and it was a strictly natural fight. Weeks before that fatal February 11 1933, wild rumor had it that the fight was "in the bag" for me. But the Garden was filled when Schaaf and I got into the ring.

I remember that I met Sharkey in my dressing room where he repeated Schaaf while I handaged my own hands and put on the gloves.

ERNIE APPARENTLY FIT

As far as we knew, and that includes Sharkey, Schaaf was in good fighting condition when the bout started, otherwise the chairmen and John Buckley his managers, would not have permitted him to tackle me.

A short time before, Schaaf had a slight attack of influenza but a few days of hospital care and he seemed [illegible] toll on Schaaf's head.

He rushed me now and then but most of the time that long left kept him at bay. When we closed in, I got to him with hard right uppercuts. None of these landed flush but they did tire him and poor Ernie finally collapsed early in the 13th round.

BAKER'S 'ACE' TAKES CAKE

FRANK HAYES ON 2D RUNG IN ACE GOLF

By GEORGE W. GRIMM

The "Sacred Six" suffered another shakeup at the Boston Evening American hole in one tourney, as the largest gathering to date saw Frank Hayes of the Braintree Golf Club breeze into second place with a shot that came within 7½ inches of the elusive aluminum cup.

Exactly 144 men and women, a number far in excess of any other day's entry list, took five pellets each and let them drive for the hole 115 yards away. Only nine were fortunate or skillful enough to land any on the green.

Agnes Gutermuth wheeked the ball within 4 ft. 5 in. of the pin and was awarded second place. Agnes is a member of the Scarboro Golf Club and a pupil of Eddie Callahan, veteran pro at Blue Hill ave.

The Scarboro Golf Club dropped to third place abruptly from the lead when Hayes of Braintree walloped his 7½ inch ace effort. Wollaston is in second place.

A bit of international color was put on the ace picture as Hideoyeiuke Ichihara chief engineer of the steamship S. S. Tahaska from Maru, N. Y. K. whistled two balls within the chalked halo of the ace green. His best shot was within 5 feet 8½ inches of the opening and the other was measured 8 feet 5½ inches. Two more of his drives were placed just outside of the circle while the fifth pellet dropped off the green into the rough.

The entry today is expected to be the largest so far, for the number is increasing as the tournament grows older.

Send in your name and address to the Golf Editor, Boston Evening American, 5 Winthrop sq., and report at Franklin Park for your ace effort. Don't miss this great tourney.

Big Sturgeon Killed

A friend just back from a fishing trip on the St. John's tells of seeing Glassie Currie of Springhill kill an 8 feet, 175 pound sturgeon caught in his salmon nets. The big fellow tore the nets badly before Currie killed him. Glassie sold him to a South Lake fox rancher for fox meat.

Last year while Charlie Warmuth [illegible] Harris Island pool for salmon a giant sturgeon passed right under our canoe less than four feet beneath the surface of the water. It looked as big as a whale. Being a true fisherman that sturgeon grows larger every time we tell of it.

George says he never saw more moose in his section of the North Woods. That should mean a great moose season when the big round October moon once more shows above the pines.

TWI NINES END PLAYER WAR

By GEORGE UNDERWOOD

The war is over between Waltham and Watertown. The scrap between the Sheridan Club and the North Cities has been ironed out and peace reigns on the Boston Twilight League front.

Cliff Shade, the bone of contention, who jumped from Waltham to Watertown, now can pitch for the Sheridans unprotested. Mgr. Tom McGillivray officially has released Shade in a swap for Len Smith, who was taken on by the Sheridans after Concord folded up.

Although peace has been declared there is no love lost between the two clubs and there should be plenty of pep when the two teams clash one week from Sunday.

Charlestown has the Boston Park League fans sitting up and taking notice. Mgr. Billy Woodman says he has the pitching now and the recent victory over the Rosebuds bears him out. Desmond, Kilduff, Doherty and Tegan all are playing great ball.

LOVELOCK TRIES AGAIN TONIGHT

Montreal, Que., July 20 (AP)— Jack Lovelock, brilliant Oxford miler, decided today to take one more shot at the Canadian standard for four furlongs in an informal meet this evening between the touring Oxford-Cambridge squad and a group of local athletes. As soon as the meet is over the British team will board ship for home.

After smashing all standards for a mile when he beat Bill Bonthron at Princeton last Saturday in 4 07.6, Lovelock failed to dent the Canadian record of 4 14 last night in the last scheduled meet of the Oxford-Cambridge tour against the Hamilton Olympic Club at Hamilton, Ont. Lovelock was timed in 4.174 on a track heavy with rain.

Tonight's program will consist of 11 track and field events and an exhibition pole vault.

Hornsby Scheduled for Browns' Post

St. Louis, July 20 (INS)—The resignation of Bill Killefer as manager of the St. Louis Browns may bring Rogers Hornsby back into the managerial ranks, it was intimated today as President Phil Ball scanned a list of prospects.

On receipt of a telegram from Vice-President L. C. McEvoy in Washington that Killefer had resigned Ball announced that Al Sothoron, coach, would take charge for the remainder of the eastern trip.

Ball declined to discuss who he had in mind as the next manager of the last place Browns, but the name of Hornsby, now second baseman for the St. Louis Cardinals, was mentioned. The Cardinals would agree to the transfer, it was [illegible]

BRAINS GOING TO SUPERSEDE STOCK SWAPS

General Foods Official Points Way to Business Growth

By B. C. FORBES

[illegible]

B. C. Forbes [illegible]

"Past experience has indicated that on a rising market the old slogan, 'it pays to advertise', is unusually apt.

[illegible]

Note, too, how far this gobbling up merger consolidation movement has gone in banking. The Chase National Bank, the National City of New York, Chicago's leading banks and many other are the culmination of [illegible]

But a new way of [illegible] growth, a new way of gaining dominance has been born and is beginning [illegible] Research [illegible]

Let Mr. [illegible] explain:

"The building of large food mergers through the purchase of smaller units has been halted, but the 'merging' of new products has proceeded in another form.

"Formerly new products were acquired through purchase of other food companies, generally through exchange of stocks.

"During the depression very few food companies have been merged by larger units.

"New products are now created within the company itself—in its own laboratories, factories and distributing systems.

"The new product is soon flourishing nationally. The only expense is the usual cost of research and development, and the cost of introducing the new product into the already established selling outlets.

"It is expected that this new plan of product development will be used more extensively. It is 'tailor made' for companies with nationally known products and nation-wide outlets."

"After three years of intense competition with private brands and bulk buying, the nationally advertised products are making a healthy rise in popular preference.

"General Foods deems this is the time to advertise vigorously."

Hereafter dominance promises to be achieved more by brains and less by stock swapping.

NEXT MOVE OF MARKET CALLED CRITICAL

By LEWIS HANEY
Professor of Economics, New York University

New York, July 20 [illegible]

[illegible]

The [illegible] special [illegible] and [illegible] stocks, however, has been [illegible] the [illegible] of the market. These recent favorites started to [illegible] out of hand Tuesday and did so thoroughly yesterday. Of course such a performance.

In fact the relative firmness of many of the sounder issues in the face of such a break in NAD [illegible] ACF [illegible] were [illegible] considered reassuring. Logically, however, it should take some time for the market to recover from such a jolt.

At the writing, Wednesday [illegible] the real leading stocks have still held close to the critical lower limits to which I referred on Monday. These were Steel at American Can 93, Dupont 79, Telephone 129, Tobacco B 90, Con Gas 60, Atchison 73 and Union Pacific 123. As long as these levels are held I would not be too sure that any big reaction is underway.

Put in view of the general [illegible] of the market I would [illegible] of a rebound. Stabilization [illegible] time. A [illegible] long no doubt. My present thought is that after the spree in alcohol and the sobering effects of today margin [illegible] be a good while before the care [illegible] of the not distant past [illegible] be resumed.

A reasonable guess is that the first rally from this setback will not carry to the old highs and that there will be some further reaction which seems likely to bring the averages still lower.

In short, it seems fairly probable that a reaction which will be greater than any yet [illegible] since April is in the making. Even if this be true, it may not come all at once. It may be interrupted by more or less frequent rallies. The averages may even be carried back close to their recent highs. But a good reaction is due and the longer it is prevented the worse it will be ultimately.

Some [illegible] has been the [illegible] in alcohol [illegible] volume with little progress in prices, markups at the opening and selloffs at the close on increased volume, and failure of leading stocks to hold above clear cut resistance levels. There has been much distribution. Yesterday brought some forced liquidation.

Talk of currency stabilization, irregularity in commodities, our poor wheat crop, factory payrolls only 43 per cent of 1926, and relatively backward retail trade were doubtless among the things which touched off the break yesterday.

Jap's Rayon Output Sets New High Mark

Production of rayon in Japan during May established a new record total of 74,[illegible]4 cases of 100 pounds each according to information given out at the Boston office of the United States Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce today.

May production was about 8,[illegible] cases greater than in April when 65,965 cases were produced and compares with 54,047 cases produced in May 1932.

The report indicated that the increased May production was a continuation of the general expansion of the rayon industry in Japan which is placing that country among the leaders in the world.

At the present rate of production Japan would produce about 90,000,000 pounds of rayon in the next 12 months. In 1932 the United States, which is the world's leading producer, had an estimated output of 131,000,000 pounds. In the same year both the United Kingdom and Italy produced about 70,000,000 pounds of rayon.

Approximately 90 per cent of the entire output of Japanese rayon mills is consumed domestically.

Approximately 61 per cent of the world reserves of petroleum is located in the Western Hemisphere with the United States credited with 48 per cent of that totatl, according to the study. Russia, Iraq and Persia are shown by the study to possess 33 per cent of the total world reserves of petroleum.

BEER BOTTLE SALES AID TO OWENS GLASS

Owens-Illinois Glass Co. sales of beer bottles during April, May and June are reflected in the increased earnings, according to Pres. William E. Levis, who added that while the peak demanded probably has passed, a large and profitable volume from regular business is anticipated from that source.

Following Tuesday's victory of repeal in Arkansas and Alabama the company started preparations for manufacturing liquor and wine bottles in large quantities to be ready to supply liquor manufacturers.

Owens-Illinois was so swamped with orders for beer bottles and fruit jars this summer that it was unable to supply the demand in its own plants despite their large capacity and so was forced to sublet contracts to two other companies.

Rally in Dollar Is the Best Since Downtrend Began

London, July 20 (INS)—The American dollar made a sharp and unexpected comeback in London transactions today and after opening at $4.79½ continued to gain until at 2 o'clock this afternoon it was quoted at $4.71 with relation to the pound sterling.

The dollar had closed at $4.82¾ yesterday.

This is the biggest gain recorded since the dollar began its sensational downward slide.

The dollar's unexpected strength is the culmination of various causes and effects such as the money market's reaction to the treasury announcement that it intends to convert the $250,000,000 war loan raised in the United States in 1917 at $3.85.

In addition there is a fairish general demand for dollars here by speculative interests.

Inlications are lacking, however, that the dollar will continue its present advance much longer.

Copper Buying Is in Volume Abroad

Copper buying was in fair volume abroad at prices ranging between 9 and 9¼ cents a pound, c. i. f. Hamburg, Havre and London.

Katanga Succeeds in Making Profit

Union Miniera du Haut-Katanga was again the world's largest producer of copper in 1932, and though its output for the full year was only about 30 per cent of capacity, and every cent of its expenses was paid in currency on the gold basis, it made an operating profit of $1,081,641.

Production was 54,000 metric tons of copper.

Raisers of Wheat Spurn Importers' Offer in London

London, July 20 (AP)—Representatives of countries exporting and producing wheat rejected today an offer by importers of the cereal to take measures fro increasing wheat importations on the grounds they were insufficient to justify the restriction of acreage.

"They have got to do more than that," said a spokesman of one of the big four countries—the United States, Canada, Argentina and Australia—whose delegates have been seeking ways to increase wheat prices.

"Their offer is in much too general terms and leaves too much to be taken for granted," he asserted.

In various speeches at a meeting this morning some of the importing countries were described as probably able to make greater and more specific suggestions for encouraging the use of wheat.

A small sub-committee of importing and exporting countries was appointed to meet to determine if an agreeable compromise could be effected.

ARMOUR'S PLAN TO BE OPPOSED BY A GROUP

New York, July 20 (AP)—A group of stockholders of Armour & Co. (Illinois) will oppose adoption of the company's capital readjustment plan, according to Eugene Frederick Roth, a New York attorney and spokesman for the dissenting holders.

Roth, in a statement, declared that "the net result of the proposal is to transfer the voting power and complete control of the present A and B common stockholders to the present holders of the preferred stock."

On the basis of asset valuations Roth continued, the A and B stockholders should in any recapitalization receive a very much larger amount of new stock than was offered under the company's plan.

The plan announced a few days ago is to be voted on by stockholders on Aug. 22.

President Roosevelt Speaks on Radio Next Week

Paul Robeson, Negro singer and actor; Mitzi Green, child film star, and Ann Butler, stage comedienne, join with Rudy Vallee for his variety show over WEEI at 8 o'clock tonight. Robeson will be heard in "Old Man River," the song associated with him. Mitzi Green will impersonate a number of movie and radio stars. The dramatic sketch on the program will be furnished by Peter and Aline Dixon of "Raising Junior" fame.

Another address by President Roosevelt is scheduled for the networks Tuesday night. It will be a broadcast of the talk he is to deliver from Washington to the conference of governors assembled at San Francisco.

After seven and a half years of broadcasting Harry Reser and his Eskimos depart from radio with this week's program. Only the Gypsies, with nine years on the air, top the Eskimos. Reser plans a vaudeville tour, starting at the Metropolitan Theater tomorrow.

The "Met" is going strong for radio talent these days. In addition to the Eskimos, Willie and Eugene Howard and Joe Rines' band will be featured, the latter serving up dance music nightly in the lounge. The three will all be heard in frequent broadcasts during the week.

Fred Allen, Somerville's contribution to Radio Comedy, comes out of retirement August 4 to take over the Musical Grocery Store, now being held down by Tom Howard and a bunch of stooges. With Allen will be his wife, Portland Hoffa, and Ferde Grofe's orchestra.

The Women's National A. A. U. Swimming championships at Jones Beach, L. I., will be described by Ted Husing over WAAB tomorrow and Saturday at 3 p. m. The outstanding feminine aquatic stars of the country will compete.

Howard Claney, NBC's new fair heared boy, will pinch hit for Graham McNamee on the Fire Chief program when "Mac" takes his two weeks vacation.

"Let's Look at the Records"

OPEN LETTER TO ATTORNEY GENERAL JOSEPH E. WARNER:

As chief of the State's legal department and advisor to the forthcoming legislative investigation of crime and the police department of Boston you will doubtless require in your work the records of the real racket kings of Boston.

Governor Ely was not successful in getting from the police department the names of the real leaders of the underworld. The list he got was composed mostly of small fry and petty offenders.

To help you in your investigation the Boston Evening American will present for your study each day the record of a man whose name stands high up in the list of public enemies and whose name has been withheld from the governor by the police department.

We present today one of the most dangerous and at the same time most contemptible characters among Boston's public enemies. Dangerous because he has a score of cheap "gunners" at his command. Thugs who would not hesitate at his command to commit a murder. And contemptible because he is at heart a coward and given to boasting, particularly before Boston police officers, of his power with the big bosses of Boston crime.

ATTY.-GEN. JOS. E. WARNER

We refer to a boss killer who, when he is called into Boston police headquarters for one reason or another, is treated with a certain deference that makes one wonder what the "low-down" might be.

We refer to the man who has appeared in court 23 times—of which 20 are recorded in Suffolk County courts. The record dates back to 1916, when he was arrested for threatening to kill a man. Then, through the years, followed counts of larceny, assault and battery, non-support of wife and child, bribery, driving away after injuring a person, and finally the "big thing"—MURDER. Do you remember that murder trial, Mr. Warner?

Do we need to point out, Mr. Warner, that Number 3 has never served a day in jail and that his record is loaded with nol prosses, suspended sentences, etc.?

Do we need to point out that Number 3 is still engaged in unlawful enterprises,

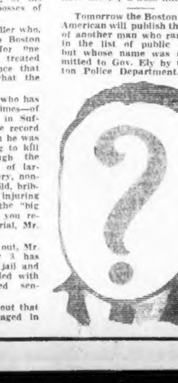
Tomorrow the Boston Evening American will publish the record of another man who ranks high in the list of public enemies, but whose name was not submitted to Gov. Ely by the Boston Police Department.



'MIKE' SCARES ARTISTS

Static, battery sets and crooners, early handicaps of radio, have all been more or less overcome, but one unwelcome relic of pioneer days seems to have grown. Microphobia—nervousness on the air—preys on more and more performers as the industry develops.

What pugilistic giants and marriage couldn't do, a mike accomplished—scared Jack Dempsey. Will Rogers, Eddie Cantor, Ed Wynn and the Marx Brothers get the jitters unless they have studio audiences. Fanny Brice is limp until her program gets under way. Al Jolson's greatest handicap is his self-consciousness before the little box. Helen Morgan tears a handkerchief into shreds during rendition of a number. Then, there are a score of "big name" stars who never got beyond the audition room because of microphobia.

Until someone produces an anti-toxin to wipe out the microphobia bug, performers will continue to shake and shiver their way out of plenty shekels.

FRIENDS OF YEARS' STANDING

To Gov. Ely, DeWitt C. DeWolf, his secretary, is just plain "Clint." One would go far before finding a more perfect friendship than exists between these two, a friendship by the way, that has stood the test of a good many years.

Dear, Sympathetic Aunt Bella:

Is it safe to say that the majority of people are honest?

Anxious.

Among one's friends, in a private gathering, as it were, the danger would perhaps be slight, depending, however, upon what kind of friends you have and what they need to tide them over the week-end. But in public, although free speech is permissible under certain circumstances, you are very useful not to block the sidewalk.

In order to make progress, Frisby is asking for 1000 alert young ladies to aid him in experiments. "All I ask," says Frisby, "is a chance to prove my theory that thought is nothing but electricity. My favorite experiment is pictured above. I stand with both feet on the ground, grip the hands of one of my human guinea pigs and begin thinking. If the guinea pig guesses what I am thinking about, then it proves that thought is electricity—and if so, then does not the Power Trust control our every thought? I cannot but feel that I am getting somewhere."

Voters Do Not Forget

A Warning to the Senate

More than a month ago a large group of representative citizens and legislators advocated a mandatory minimum wage for protection of the women and girls from the ruthless exploitation of the sweatshops in Massachusetts.

The insufferable conditions in these sweatshops had been adequately exposed.

The women and girls were working in insanitary and unhealthful conditions. The pay they received at the end of the week for their arduous, exacting labors disgraced the name of wage. It was a beggar's pittance. It was a pittance that forced them onto the dole lists, that made paupers of them in order to acquire the barest necessities of life.

In view of these conditions, the House of Representatives, presided over by Speaker Leverett Saltonstall, promptly admitted the legislation to grant these hard-working and much abused women and girls a mandatory minimum wage.

The Legislature now approaches the end of its session, but the Massachusetts Senate has idled and buck-passed on this legislation which the House, in its good judgment, deemed worthy of consideration.

Mind you, there is a wide difference between ADOPTING LEGISLATION and ADMITTING LEGISLATION FOR CONSIDERATION.

When you adopt the latter course, you merely say that you will receive the petition for legislation, that you will hold a public hearing upon it and that you will allow the advocates and the opponents to argue its merits or defects before you.

This the Massachusetts Senate has NOT done.

For some specious reason, or for some secret reason best known to itself, the Senate has failed as yet to grant the sweatshop women and girls the dignity of considering their case.

Perhaps the Senate believes that the people are prone to forget. Perhaps it feels that its inactivity in this matter will be lost sight of. Perhaps it feels that it can formally vote, in the fag-end of the legislative session, not to receive this legislation and that its dereliction to its evident duty will be ignored in the mass of eleventh-hour scrambling.

If the Senate believes these things, it does not know the temper of the people in these times.

If it did know the temper of the people, it would not only receive this legislation but it would adopt it unhesitatingly in order that the doom of the sweatshops will be sealed forever.

You can't permit the exploitation of helpless women and girls forever and not feel the resentment of the public-spirited men and women of this State who are not helpless.

The Wet Parade

Repeal by Christmas Possible

The Solid South is no longer solid—for prohibition.

Alabama and Arkansas have declared the same sentiment that exists throughout the country.

Prohibition is doomed. It has failed. It must be wiped out and there must be substituted in its place a new system that will promote temperance and respect for law.

But we have shown a dominant and universal sentiment against prohibition which was never before approached in our history, save against the scheme to put us into the League of Nations.

Prohibition has erected a structure of corruption, banditry and lawlessness as common to the South as to the other sections of the country.

The people there, as elsewhere, have seen a reckless defiance of all law. They have seen the bootlegger, the hijacker and all the criminal geatry derive illegitimate profits which financed the underworld in all its other criminal undertakings. They have seen the government robbed of its income and the public robbed of their respect for law, order and decency.

Now that the South has spoken, in concert with its sister States of the North and Mid-West, prohibition should be ripped out of the Constitution speedily and relegated to the limbo of discarded things.

We should proceed to work out now a sensible system for regulation of the liquor traffic—a system that will stimulate true temperance, under government control and without the private profits that are the temptation to lawlessness.

The End of a Racket

Postmasters Put Under Civil Service

President Roosevelt, in bringing first, second and third class postmasters under close civil service supervision, ends a long established tradition of subtle political racketeering.

By a stroke of the pen he abolishes the doctrine that in public life the ruling theme in appointments must be "to the victors belong the spoils."

Such a custom was obviously inconsistent with the Administration's insistence on greater efficiency and economy in government.

It is highly wasteful to make business appointments, such as postmasterships, mere political plums.

Not only did the old system bring wastrels into office, but it retarded ambition because of the fear that jobs would automatically be lost when there was a party upset.

In insisting that new appointees be selected from groups who have been rated by the Civil Service Commission after written examinations, Mr. Roosevelt contributes to an improvement in the standard of quality for public servants.

Realists will recognize that within the eligible lists there will still be leeway for the expression of political preferences and rewards.

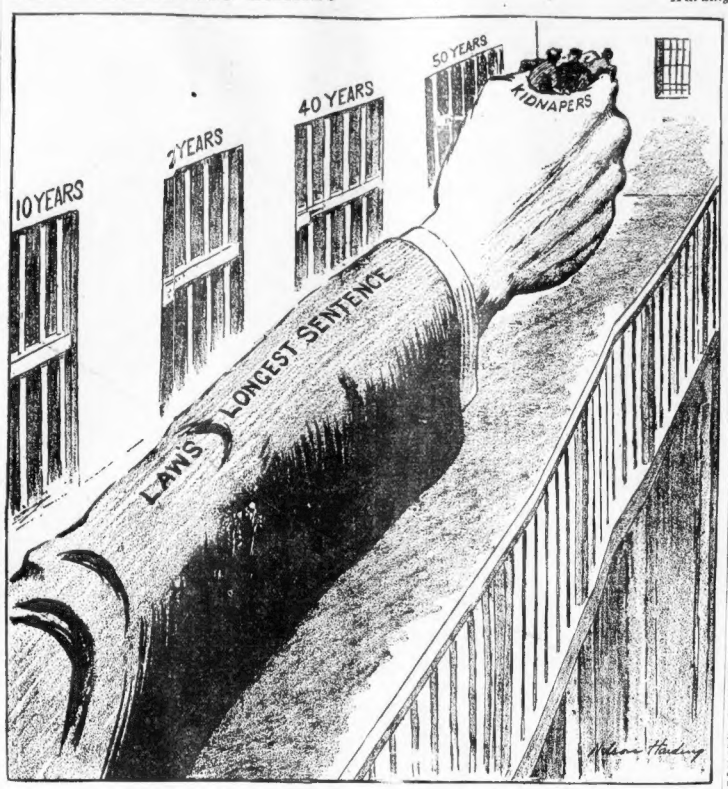
Nevertheless, the true inner spirit of the President's new order will be violated unless efficiency and merit are insisted upon in such appointments.

Government is weakened by the racketeering spirit whenever appointments are made on any other basis.

In raising standards for public personnel, Mr. Roosevelt is following the fine tradition of another Democrat—Grover Cleveland.

Give Them the Limit

By Nelson Harding



There must be no mercy shown,
No weak sentiment expended
On the heartless perpetrators
Of this crime, so cold and cruel.

Let the law's arm be extended
To the limit in its sentence,
To the longest term in prison
It can give to all found guilty.

Broadway Characters

NEW YORK, July 20—Broadway, like the village, has its odd characters whose orbit is bounded on the north by Columbus Circle, and south by Herald Square. There is Artie Hitchborn, runner for a Times Square ticket scalpery, whose patois is as pure Broadway as a student of native dialect ever encountered.

O. O. McIntyre

He might have stepped from a page of a Damon Runyon legend of the street. Coxey, the insurance man, is seen where the fight crowds gather. Also Dr. Leo Michele, Rialto physician, at first nights. Leo Newman, silver-haired king of ticket brokers, has watched the flow from his cubicle shop 30 years.

Then Dave Levy, the haberdashery clerk, who knows everybody of importance from Max Baer to the ace star, Katharine Cornell. Crying fury, a hooded Niobe with perfect tear duct control, who stands in the shadows asking alms. But owns four apartment houses in New Jersey.

Earl Carroll's shadow, "The Count." Oompah, the leather-lunged newsie, who says "dese" and "dose," but can quote the poets. Moe DuCore, well-plumed Broadway druggist, always with a fresh lapel flower. Sister Edith, the Salvationist who is the image of Ethel Barrymore. And Dixie, the girl taxi charioteer.

J. P. Morgan, Sr., a neat connoisseur of fine wines, was once challenged on his knowledge of vintages by friends. They blindfolded the magnate and gave him samples of famous numbers of the period. He guessed all: Krug, '98, the Chateauneff du Pape of a great year, a priceless Yquem and a comet year Charente. Finally they gave him a glass of water. Morgan ejected it in distaste, looked puzzled, rinsed his mouth with vermouth and tried it again, seemingly puzzled. "Gentlemen," he said. "I can't quite place it, but it appears to be the fluid we brush our teeth with."

Maclin Marrow, Apollo of young Manhattan musicians and organizer of the Radio City Music Hall Orchestra, bearded an uptown subway train with his violin the other day. At 72d street a fellow fiddling for pennies got on and Marrow asked him, amusedly, if he knew the Bach concerto for two violins. The chap did, and together they played it, strolling the length of the roaring train, netting 45 cents. They each took two dimes and matched for the odd nickel. Marrow won. This compensated for riding by his stop and returning from 125th street.

In a tea room a neat-handed Phyllis served the meal and at the finish revealed: "My mother used to go to school with you!" She spoke a name I remembered and said her parents were living in a small town in the Southwest. It was a pleasant experience but developed a problem in etiquette. What to do about a tip? After all, her livelihood depended entirely upon such largesse. Yet I felt a diffidence not entirely Scotch. In the end I tucked two one dollar bills under my plate, trusting it would be considered more a gift from her mother's acquaintance. Today the bills were returned with a scribble: "Thanks!" I suppose it all simmers down to my being too sappy to be roaming at large.

Listen, World!

By Elsie Robinson

Stop, Look and Listen!

EVERY DAY a mountain of mail. Unhappy letters, most of them. Disappointed, resentful people crying out against their loneliness. Railing against the indifference of the world. Wondering why they have such bad luck. Complaining because they never get their "chance." Blaming everyone but themselves for their bad breaks.

Hundreds of letters daily. Some typed, some written. Some on expensive bond, some on cheap pad paper. Each one telling a different story. Yet through them all runs one strange similarity.

Elsie Robinson

NEARLY ALL THE WRITING IS SO FAINT THAT IT IS DIFFICULT TO READ.

Faint writing—that may not seem an important matter to you. It doesn't seem important to the writers. They may make a vague apology. "Please excuse this pencil; my pen isn't handy" . . . "I guess it's hard to read this typing. I should have changed the ribbon, but I didn't want to take time."

Feeble apologies, which they really don't mean, for they don't care if their faint writing is hard to read. That's the other fellow's bad luck, and, to them, only their own bad luck matters.

Nevertheless, if they but knew it, their writing tells the reason for their bad luck. For writing is more than a bunch of letters. It's a clue to character. You can nearly always find the reason for a man's story in the way he writes it.

Why aren't these unhappy people getting the breaks? Why can't they make the world stop, look and listen? That's why.

THEIR RECORD IS TOO FAINT!

Not only the record of their dull pencils, their shabby typewriter ribbons—BUT THE RECORD OF THEIR CHARACTERS, WHICH IS REFLECTED IN THEIR PENCILS AND RIBBONS AND IN EVERYTHING ELSE THEY USE AND DO.

They have a real story to tell, those miserable souls. A sad story of disappointment and discouragement, failing hopes and fading dreams. They want and need help from the other fellow.

But they "can't be bothered" to put that story or themselves into shape so that the other fellow can know what it's all about.

Why can't they be bothered?

Partly because they're too selfish to care how much work they cause the other fellow.

Partly because they are actually getting a secret bang out of Being Miserable—and would far rather sob through life than snap into it.

Then they wonder why no one "shows them any consideration."

But why should the world get busy for them? If they won't get busy on themselves?

WE ARE "our brother's keepers." Our neighbor's bad luck IS our concern. But unless he's a child or an idiot, it's up to him to do his part first. It's up to him to know what he wants, and then state it so it can be heard.

And it's also up to him to consider the other fellow's rights, if he wishes to have his own considered.

Meaning what?

Meaning that it's no particular treat for the other fellow to assume your burdens. And if he does so you—not he—are the debtor. You'll get a lot further if you remember that before you start.

If you want your neighbor to help you meet him half way. No use huddling way back in your deep, dark hole; "daring" him to come and drag you out; blaming him if he doesn't. That will buy you nothing but more grief.

The world's too big and too bothered to waste its time playing hide-and-seek with a deliberate gloom.

Thought is the seed of action.

What is worth doing at all is worth doing well.—Earl of Chesterfield.

Men do not realize how great a revenue thrift is.—Cicero.

Money is like time; lose none and you will have plenty—Pierre Gaston.

With No Takers

A man in Chicago was offered a chance last April to buy a 20-story "skyscraper" for $5. He turned it down. Preferred to keep his five, he said.

The building was in the Loop, only a block from State st. It brought in $50,000 a year in rent.

The catch was that taxes were $40,000 a year, and a year's back taxes were due.

Service charges also ate up a large share of the income; $12,500 had to be paid yearly to the owner of the land.

To make both ends meet, the proprietors of the building therefore tore it down and made the lot into a parking space.

They are getting enough from it now to pay expenses and make a little profit.

The city, however, is out $80,000 in taxes. And the moral of this true story—which Boston can ponder—is that when tax rates move toward the sky, buildings move toward the ground.

His 1000th Broadcast

M: Thompson, radio editor, made his 1000th broadcast of the news recently from the studio of the Boston Evening American. The event occasioned the following letter to be sent to this newspaper:

"Boston Evening American,
"Boston, Mass.

"The 1000th broadcast of the news yesterday evening emphasized the fact of your persistent and healthful leadership in journalism.

"May the future bring you the continued joy of success, and the honor due to faithful service in your field.

"Truly yours,
"REV. GEORGE STUDSON DELANO."

"Dorchester, Mass."

The above letter is typical of many that have come to this office, and it is published in order that the Boston Evening American may say "Thank you" to all who have expressed such friendly sentiments.

Human Side of the News

Widow of Carl Akeley a Daring Explorer Herself—Mysterious Thibet

—By Edwin C. Hill—

Carl Akeley, sculptor naturalist and African explorer, who first proved that the gorilla is a shy creature and that the lion is a gentleman, has gone to his reward. But his charming wife, Mrs. Mary L. Jobe Akeley, who adventured with him into the deepest jungles of the Black Continent, remains to carry on his great work.

When Carl Akeley died suddenly in Africa while collecting the magnificent specimens of African wild life that now fill the new African Hall, the expedition was left without a leader. But Mrs. Akeley, then in the Kivu mountains jungle, two miles high, stepped resolutely into her dead husband's place and carried his work on to success.

A Bryn Mawr and Columbia girl, she had adventure tingling in her blood. An explorer in her own right she has made ten expeditions into the high Canadian Rockies. A mountain there is named after her, "Mount Jobe." She mapped the headquarters of the Fraser River. She knows Africa as few old hunters knows its mysteries. She can wear, if she pleases, the order of the Crown of Belgium.

She tells me that African wild life is fast disappearing—elephants, lions, giraffes, all the great creatures. The only hope of preserving it is to establish in Africa a chain of great game-preserve parks.

Of all the adventurous ladies of the times the one who had the most thrilling experience, I think, was Madame Alexandra David-Neel, who spent 14 years as a professed Buddhist in mysterious Thibet. She is the only white woman who was ever made a lama, or high priest, of the Buddhist faith.

In that land of Snow, far up in the Himalayas, she came in touch with the unknowable, the incredible, the old magic of the East. With her own eyes she saw the priests and magicians of Thibet make light of the laws of nature. She saw them sit naked in the frozen snow, at heights of 10,000 feet, 15,000 feet, and melt the snow around them with the bodily heat they were able to create at will.

She saw them crouch in pits and spring straight upward 11 feet, with bodies that defied the law of gravity, made so light that the mere power of the human will that they had to be loaded down with chains to keep them on the ground.

She tells the story in her fascinating book, "The Magic and Mystery of Thibet." It is the story of the wonder-workers who have mastered some ancient secret of breathing, by which they make their bodies so light almost as the air itself; by which mountain runners can cover in a few hours distance it would take a galloping horse three days to make; by which they can go for days in the terrible cold of the high Himalayas, with no clothing whatever, and yet remain as warm as if clothed with furs.

Uncanny and mysterious as it is, the Thibetans deny that there is anything supernatural about their amazing magic. They told Madame David-Neel that all the so-called wonders depend on the clever handling of little-known laws and forces of nature. They said to her:

"Gods, humans, the whole universe, are but a mirage which exists in the mind, springs from it and sinks into it."

One of all the mysteries of Thibetan magic, there was one for which there was no possible explanation to satisfy the shaken mind—the summoning back of life to the bodies of the dead; the dreadful power to recall, from whatever bourne to which it had taken wing, the freed and unshackled soul; to hear, above the muttered incantations of the magicians, the thin and reedy lament of lagging and reluctant spirits.

What fascination there is in the discovery of old cities and the eloquent relics of old peoples who lived so far back in time that the last echoes of their civilizations ceased to reverberate a thousand years ago. In upper Egypt patient archaeologists have come upon the tomb of some forgotten king. Upon the head of the king rested a crown of solid silver. In his right hand was a sword of iron with a silver hilt. At his side was a spear of iron with a silver haft. And all about were warriors and slaves slain on the spot to keep their master company as he passed into the other world.

In Upper Egypt they have found, also, the beautifully sculptured head, in marble, of the most beautiful woman who ever lived in Egypt—not Cleopatra, but the great Queen Nefretete, whose beauty was so dazzling that men veiled their eyes as from the blazing rays of the sun.

Down in Mexico the men who make the past live again, with all its fire and color and romance, made just the other day the greatest find in years. Seven feet underground they came upon the tomb of a little girl of nine or ten, and around her were her toys every much such toys as children have today—a red tiger with a rifle, a collar, a doll baby, tiny cooking vessels and a red owl which whistled when she blew into it. And, standing in the tomb of that little girl of ancient America, one of the men of science raised the red owl to his lips and blew into it, and it whistled shrilly, the first sound that had come from it for more than one thousand years.

Just Folks

The Price

Into the court he came. Beyond a doubt
A thief—convicted by a jury of his peers!
So from the world the law must shut him out
For fifteen years.

Thieves prey on men and women. Therefore they
With their own outcast kind must dwell,
Marching in step and robed in garments gray,
A number and a cell!

Nor spring, nor summer, nor the autumn rich,
Nor the white glory of the winter's snow
Brings any difference to the dull round which
Is theirs to know.

There must be safety for the lawful throng
But still whene'er a thief is led away
I pity him the bitter price of wrong
Good men ask him to pay.
